It's all over: Wahid leaving

JAKARTA, Indonesia—Telling family and friends that stress could trigger a third and fatal stroke, ousted head of state Abdurrahman Wahid is preparing to vacate the presidential palace and travel to the United States for medical treatment.

"If I have a third stroke, I will die," Wahid was quoted as saying by Emha Ainun Najib, a Muslim leader and longtime friend.

Someone 'very, very close' took a bribe

BY MARTIN P. MARFIL,

AND ARMAND NOCUM

FOR the first time since her husband was accused of accepting money in exchange for the recall of a vetoed franchise bill, President Macapagal-Arroyo admitted Tuesday that she had known that her correspondence secretary was going to resign because someone "very, very close" to the President had allegedly received a bribe.

The President said a certain Ralph Evangelista had told her that then Palace secretary Veronica "Bing" Rodrigo was planning to quit.

"She was afraid because somebody had already received the money and when it could not be returned, she was being blamed," Ms Macapagal said.

She was referring to a bill she had vetoed that would have granted a telecommunications franchise to a clearinghouse company allegedly owned by prominent businessman Jaime Dichaves, a close friend of her predecessor, Joseph Estrada. The veto was not recalled despite an official request.

Ms Macapagal said she asked Evangelista who had received the alleged bribe to ensure that the presidential veto would be revoked.

"Who then took the money? (Evangelista) said he couldn't re-

Kidnappings rise; gang boss nabbed

BY CARLITO PABLO

THE GOOD news: Working under a 90-day deadline to stamp out organized crime, the Philippine National Police yesterday announced the arrest of a leader of a kidnapping gang who is also the No. 1 most wanted person in the Southern Tagalog region.

The bad news: The number of kidnapping cases nationwide rose by almost 100 percent under the administration of President Macapagal-Arroyo compared to the same period last year, according to official figures.

The PNP recorded a total of 41 kidnapping cases from January to June—almost double the 22 cases recorded in the first semester of 2000.

But Lucas Managuelod, head of the Directorate for Criminal Investigation and Detective Management, noted that while the number of kidnapping cases had risen under the Macapagal administration, authorities had improved on the record of solved cases.

He said that of the 22 kidnapping cases recorded in the first half of last year, nine were solved. But of the 41 cases recorded in the same period this year, 25 were solved.

As for the arrest of the kidnap gang leader, Chief Supt. Nestorio Gualberto, head of the PNP Criminal Investigation and Detection

Big tax cuts for firms, employees

Wage earners need not file tax returns

BY JULIET L. JAVELLANA AND CLARISSA S. BATINO

A PERSON earning less than P75,000 a year is exempt from paying income tax under the administration's proposed tax reform program. He pays as much as P15,000 under the present system.

Under the proposed tax program, if he earns P250,000 a year, he pays only P35,000, a savings of P40,000.

The program seeks to reduce the tax brackets to four from the existing seven.

Presidential spokesperson Rigoberto Tiglao yesterday said that there was also a proposal to exempt fixed-income earners from filing their income tax returns.

"If you already have a withholding tax, you may prefer not to file your income tax. It's OK. The reason for this is that the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR) is swamped with income tax returns. It's added work for them but no additional taxes are collected," he said.

For companies, the proposal is to reduce corporate tax from the current 32 percent to either 26, 21 or 20 percent.

Tiglao said the proposed modified gross income tax system for corporate taxpayers and the new income tax schedule for individual income earners would be discussed at a meeting of the Legislative-Executive Development Advisory Council (Ledac) next week.

The President is expected to certify to Congress the pro-

15M Filipinos start day with no breakfast

BY JUAN V. SARMIENTO JR.

ABOUT 15.3 million Filipinos wake up every morning without food on the table as a growing number of people in the country live below the poverty line, the Commission on Population (Popcom) yesterday said.

"They are called subsistence individuals or families because they fall below the food threshold, or whose income cannot provide basic food requirements," Popcom said in a statement.

The agency said 40 percent of the country's population of 77 million, or 30.6 million people, live below the poverty line, up from 37 percent in 1997.

President Macapagal-Arroyo cited the same poverty incidence in her first State of the Nation Address on July 23. The figure was culled from unofficial reports of the National Statistical Coordination Board.

"Poverty is not just a statistical indicator. It is a condition that strips people of their dignity and spoils the hope of generations for a better life," Tomas Osias, Popcom executive director, said.

Popcom said an average Filipino should have an annual income of P12,000 to meet his or her food and non-food requirements. A person is considered poor if his income falls below this threshold.

A family of six earning a total of P72,000 a year is not considered poor.

But this amount is way below the P191,878.4 that a family of six must earn every year to live decently in Metro Manila, according to a study that the Statistical Research and Training Center conducted for the National Wages and Productivity Commission.

The study pegged the monthly "living wage" 15M/ A12

A House oversight committee will be created precisely to monitor the performance of the executive department on the 35 promises.

NON-SMOKERS' RISK

It takes only 30 minutes...

CHICAGO—Just half-an-hour exposure to secondhand smoke can impair a nonsmoker's normal blood flow to the heart, a Japanese study suggests.

The study, conducted on 15 non-smoking men and 15 smokers who spent 30 minutes inside a hospital smoking room, found that after ex-posure to tobacco smoke the blood flow of nonsmokers dropped to the same level found in habitual smokers.

The smokers, whose heart arteries already showed damage, were not further affected by secondhand smoke.

Exposure to tobacco smoke resulted in a reduced ability of the nonsmokers' heart arteries to dilate, which previous research had suggested might be a precursor to the hardening of the arteries.

"This provides direct evidence of a harmful effect of passive smoking on the coronary circulation of

Ani appeals SC ruling on Erap bank secrecy

BY ALCUIN PAPA
AND DONNA S. CUETO

THE OMBUDSMAN yesterday asked the Supreme Court to reconsider its ruling barring the independent investigator from looking into the bank records of persons being probed for graft.

In a motion for reconsideration, Ombudsman Aniano Desierto urged the high tribunal to set aside its ruling and uphold the power of his office to look into bank records "to strengthen the probe body in the performance of its task."

"The power to investigate corrupt public officials and private individuals who conspired with them must not be fettered by claims of the privilege of confidentiality, especially where the matter being investigated has been clearly and properly identified and where reasonable safeguards have been adopted," the Ombudsman said.

The motion was also signed by Solicitor General Simeon Marcelo.

In a unanimous ruling last month, the Supreme Court said the Ombudsman could look into the bank records of respondents in a graft complaint only in the five instances allowed under Republic Act 1405, or the Bank Secrecy Law.

Otherwise, a bank cannot be compelled to submit records of its depositors to the Ombudsman.

"Zones of privacy are recognized and protected in our laws," said the court in the decision penned by Associate Justice Bernardo Pardo.

Desierto said he was concerned the high court's ruling would block the prosecution of the plunder case against former President Joseph Estrada.

Although 10 of 11 banks believed to hold the hidden wealth of Estrada have submitted their records to the Ombudsman, Desierto said he might need more evidence from other banks.

Yesterday, government prosecutors asked the Sandiganbayan to summon the presidents of seven banks from which at least P545 million in cashier's checks, linked to the Jose Velarde account, had been drawn.

The banks were PSBank, Global Bank, PCIBank, Equitable PCIBank, Security Bank, Metrobank, and Bank of the Philippine Islands.

The checks were purchased from the banks between Sept. 30, 1999 and Dec. 24, 1999.

On another front, the Sandiganbayan rejected yesterday the Ombudsman's third attempt to amend the perjury case against Estrada.

Saying Estrada should have been properly informed of the charges against him before he was arraigned, Presiding Justice Francis Garchitorena denied the motion to amend, even as government lawyers presented a detailed list of 51 corporations, in which Estrada allegedly had holdings, which it wanted to include in the case.

The Ombudsman said it was not able to include these corporations in the information for perjury "because of the obvious problem of space."

Opposition senators reject PPC offers

BY ARMAND N. NOCUM

OPPOSITION senators yesterday rejected a People Power Coalition offer of a key committee in exchange for their support for the fragile leadership of Senate President Franklin Drilon.

Some senators fear that the continued antagonism between the two opposing blocs in the Senate could have a deadening effect on President Macapagal-Arroyo's legislative agenda.

Opposition senators have been holding a series of meetings to ensure that they are united against accepting any committee chairmanships to prevent their ranks being raided by the 13-man majority.

They have also initiated moves to lure members of administration bloc, including independent Sen. Noli de Castro who provided the crucial 13th vote that installed Drilon in power.

Opposition Sen. Vicente Sotto III, claiming that they can already count on De Castro's support, said the score was now even at 12-12.

"Did he not say in a speech that he was remaining an independent senator and that he is not really a part of the administration bloc?" Sotto said.

In explaining his vote for Drilon on Monday, De Castro said he was not taking an "oath to become a bona fide member of the administration party because I sincerely believe that the opposition maintains a very strong agenda."

In rejecting the committee leadership, opposition leader Sen. Edgardo Angara said they were taking to heart the statements made by Sen. Joker Arroyo that the two blocs should maintain clear battle lines.

"The prevailing, dominant sentiment is not to accept any committee (role)," Angara said. "Remember, they said they don't want to sleep with the enemy."

Reacting to Angara's statement, administration Sen. Juan Flavio Velez said he was not reluctant to sleep with the enemy.

"I will sleep with any of the ladies there, not with the men," he said.

Flavio confirmed that the PPC has offered certain opposition senators the chance to keep key committee leaderships.

The senators involved are Rodolfo Biazon, chair of the national defense and security panel; Sergio Osmeña, agriculture; and Robert Jaworski, environment.

But in a separate briefing, Sen. Ramon Magsaysay Jr. said the offer was premised on the opposition senator joining the PPC. "When he joins us, that means that he is supporting the administration measures. Then we'll give him a major committee," he said. "How can we give a major committee to a senator who is going to attack the administration? How can that be?"

Biazon said he would accept the offer if there is no condition attached to it. Otherwise, "I might as well do without a committee," he said.

But Sen. Aquilino Pimentel Jr. said the opposition would decide on the issue as a bloc.

"The majority is now sitting on top of the sharp end of a bayonet, a precarious position," he said.

"They are moving heaven and earth to get more people to their side. I'm not sure they will succeed," he said.

Drilon and Magsaysay admitted that a slim majority could affect the speedy passage of bills.

"When votes would be required on the floor, it is a little thrilling to say the least, if you have that kind of majority," Drilon said.

Magsaysay said passage of bills could take a backseat to partisan politics.

Smear job, Lina says of 'rumors'

INTERIOR Secretary Jose Lina Jr. yesterday said rumors about his impending dismissal were "baseless lies" and part of a "grand smear campaign" to distract him from pursuing his peace and order initiatives.

In a press release, he accused persons interested in his post and those who were affected by the renewed campaign of the Department of Interior and Local Government against criminality of circulating the rumors.

"Rumors of my removal as DILG chief are nothing but baseless lies peddled by persons interested in the post and those whom I may have stepped on as we go on with our renewed drive against criminality, particularly illegal gambling and illegal drugs," Lina said.

He said President Macapagal-Arroyo had assured him that no Cabinet revamp was in the offing, debunking the claims of those behind the rumors.

"I trust the words of the President, as it is only her who can tell me when it is time to go," Lina added.

Recto lawyer says Comelec verdict legal

BY GERALD G. LACUARTA

LAWYERS for Sen. Ralph Recto insisted yesterday the National Board of Canvassers' resolution declaring their client the 12th place winner in the Senate race was legal and valid, citing a 1987 Supreme Court ruling which upheld a Comelec decision voted on by five of seven commissioners.

Romulo Macalintal, counsel for Recto, said the SC ruling of Dec. 17, 1987 in the case of Quezon Rep. Junie Cua vs Comelec upheld the 3-2 vote of the election body affirming the proclamation of Cua's rival.

"The three members who voted to affirm the proclamation constituted a majority of the five members who deliberated and voted thereon and their decision was also valid under Article IX-A, Section 7 of the Constitution," the SC ruling said.

"NBOC Resolution No. 01-006 on the senatorial rankings was valid because there was a quorum when the Comelec en banc decided," Macalintal said. "Majority of the members were present during the deliberation."

Comelec Chair Alfredo Benipayo also cited the Cua case to justify the promulgation of NBOC Resolution 01-006 by three commissioners.

Benipayo also said procedures for canvassing under Comelec Resolution No. 4343 only require a majority vote of the commissioners present.

Only three of the seven-member Comelec—Benipayo and Commissioners Rex Borra and Florentino Tuason Jr.—approved NBOC Resolution 01-006.

Two other commissioners, Luzviminda Tancanco and Rufino Javier, dissented while Commissioners Mehol Sadain and Ralph Lantion were absent when the resolution penned by Borra was submitted to a vote.

Lawyer Rufus Rodriguez, counsel for Sen. Loi Ejercito, however, said the reference of Benipayo and Macalintal to the Cua case was misplaced as the facts of the case were different.

Rodriguez said the 3-2 vote in Cua vs Comelec was upheld by the SC since at the time, one member of the Comelec had died while another commissioner had abstained from voting.

"Effectively, there were only five members because one was dead and another deliberately refused to vote," Rodriguez said.

He said the present Comelec has seven members, three of whom voted in the affirmative while two dissented.

"The two others, Sadain and Lantion, were absent and were not given the opportunity to participate," Rodriguez said. "The Comelec en banc should have reset the deliberations to allow the two others to participate."

Asean officials hail progress on Spratlys code of conduct

HANOI—Southeast Asian foreign ministers on Tuesday welcomed progress in consultations between Asean and China for a code of conduct to ease conflicting territorial claims in the South China Sea.

The Association of Southeast Asian Nations ministers, ending their annual meeting, also called for restraint among rival claimants in the area identified as one of the region's potential military flash points.

"We reviewed developments in the South China Sea and welcomed the progress in the consultations between ASEAN and China towards the adoption of the Code of Conduct in the South China Sea," said a joint communique issued at the close of the two-day gathering.

The ministers also "encouraged the continued exercise of self-restraint by all the parties concerned and the promotion of confidence building measures in this area and welcomed their commitment to resolving disputes in the South China Sea by peaceful means in conformity" with UN laws.

The code would cover the Spratlys, a chain of islands in the South China Sea claimed in whole or in part by Asean members Brunei, Malaysia, the Philippines and Vietnam, along with non-members China and Taiwan.

Believed to sit on vast oil and natural gas deposits, the chain is seen as a potential flash point for armed conflict because all the claimants except Brunei have troops stationed in the area, which also covers strategic shipping lanes and rich fishing grounds.

Completion of the proposed code, which seeks to set rules governing activities in the South China Sea, has been delayed by a lack of consensus among claimant nations on the area to be covered.

Vietnam wants the disputed Paracel Islands, which are occupied by China, to be included in the code.

The Philippines has circulated a new draft of the code, which dropped any reference to geographic boundaries in a bid to break the impasse.

China and Taiwan claim the entire South China Sea on historical grounds.

However, the new draft needs to be studied further by the senior officials in meetings leading to the Asean leaders' summit in Brunei in November.

At their meeting on Monday, the Asean ministers urged their senior officials to speed up completion of the code, a confidence-building measure aimed at easing tension in the area, where there have been occasional confrontations between Chinese fishermen and the navies of rival claimants.

The ministers are expected to discuss the Spratlys during a meeting with Chinese Foreign Minister Tang Jiaxuan during the Asean Regional Forum on security issues here Wednesday.

Two democracies, two different paths

WITHIN a span of seven months, two democratically elected presidents in Southeast Asia fell from power. The first was President Joseph Estrada who was deposed last January, and the second was President Abdurrahman Wahid of Indonesia, who was dismissed from office by the People's Consultative Assembly (MPR) last Monday.

EDITORIAL There are many similarities in the circumstances of their fall from power but these should not be allowed to cloud judgment over the long-term prospects of democracy in the Philippines and Indonesia.

Wahid was dismissed by a 591-0 vote of the assembly, the highest Indonesian state organ, after he provoked a constitutional crisis by declaring a state of emergency ahead of the start of impeachment proceedings on Aug. 1 to remove him for alleged incompetence and corruption. The refusal of the armed forces to follow his order to disband the assembly, in an effort to keep power, forced the assembly to move the process forward.

Estrada held power for 30 months; Wahid for only 21 months. The fact that both were democratically elected did not stop their removal. In the Philippines, the failed impeachment trial of Estrada sparked the popular uprising that led to his fall. In Indonesia, Wahid was stripped of power by the assembly which elected him president in 1999. The process of removal in Indonesia was constitutional. In the Philippines, the assumption of Vice President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo of the presidency was clouded with constitutional doubts after Estrada stepped down without formally resigning. The Indonesian process was more straightforward. Wahid did not have to go through a long impeachment process, as Estrada did. Both Estrada and Wahid protested that their dismissal was illegal and unconstitutional.

In both crises, Estrada and Wahid were charged with corruption and incompetence; and the military's withdrawal of support forced the collapse of government. Estrada left Malacañang after Ms Macapagal was sworn in by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Wahid continues to be holed up at the Merdeka Palace, refusing to recognize reality, but he is expected to leave the Palace without being dragged out.

Defying all predictions, Wahid's removal took place peacefully. His defiant warning that his mass following in Java would rise up in revolt if he were impeached by the assembly did not come true.

So, two of Southeast Asia's democracies are now ruled by women. By sheer coincidence, Indonesia's new president, Megawati Sukarnoputri, was Wahid's vice president. The assembly followed the constitutional route on succession. The Filipinos also followed this route after the collapse of the Estrada government.

Another uncanny coincidence is that Ms Macapagal's father, President Diosdado Macapagal, and Megawati's father, President Sukarno, were contemporaries in the post-colonial regional alliance-making in Southeast Asia.

Having followed their own constitutional process, the Indonesians have achieved two peaceful power transfers in just two years. In 1999, Wahid was elected by the assembly to succeed the caretaker government of President B.J. Habibie. The removal of Wahid marked the assertion of legislative power and the return of the armed forces to the pivotal role of political kingmaker in Indonesia.

The lesson from the fall of the two leaders is that a democratically elected government can no longer be confident of holding on to power. Henceforth, elected presidents would do well to consider that their longevity in office could also depend on good governance and competence—qualities which both Estrada and Wahid didn't possess.

Megawati and President Macapagal now face daunting problems that stretch the resilience of their respective political systems. They are plagued with separatist rebellions and an economic downturn, while presiding over political systems that are still groping for stability. Here, we have two democracies trying to find their way to stability, stumbling in the process, but also redefining their political systems according to their cultures.

Indonesia and the Philippines are walking on two different paths of democracy that turns on its head the Western concept of that political system. But if we learned from Western models, they can also learn from our evolution.

Urban agriculture will create more jobs

HERE are excerpts from the open letter of Director Edgar B. Aglipay of the Philippine National Police to Ador, the former Presidential Anti-Organized Crime Task Force informer who implicated him in the drug trade:

"It is exactly one week now since you implicated my name in the illegal drugs but which up to this day you have not substantiated with any piece of evidence. My family has suffered long enough hearing you malign our name and reputations. Enough is enough.

"I completely and categorically deny your baseless, unfounded and whimsical statements linking me to an alleged drug distribution activity. In said statement, you said that former Chief PNP and now Sen. Panfilo Lacson gave you instructions to contact me through my publicly announced cellular phone number 09175360391. "How could these allegations be true when the last time that Senator Lacson and I talked was the day after Edsa Dos when out of courtesy, I explained my reasons for withdrawing support from the Estrada government.

"I have always maintained a good career record and I will not jeopardize my reputation by being involved in any nefarious or illegal activity whether in the past, present or future. I have been serving my country as an officer for 30 years from the time I graduated from the (Philippine Military) Academy in 1971. As a young lieutenant, I was awarded the Gold Cross for bravery in 1972 for leading the patrol team that captured the m.v. Karagatan which was full of armaments for the CPP/NPA...

"... I want to continue looking at my family and the Lord when I go to church with no guilt knowing that I have done no harm to my fellow men and my country.

"I wish to thank PNP Chief, Director General Leandro Mendoza, for vouching for my conduct and my performance and the majority who have come to my defense.

"I ask you to be more responsible in your statements. Nevertheless, my family and I still continue to pray that the Good Lord will enlighten you."

AS I SEE IT

Neal H. Cruz

Among the plans President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo revealed in her State of the Nation Address is to give emergency jobs to out-of-school youth. She probably already has jobs waiting for them, but may I add a proposal for more jobs to more out-of-school youth. I already proposed this in an earlier column but I'll repeat it if it will help create more jobs. This is urban farming, or planting vegetables on vacant lots and backyards in urban areas. The recent typhoon that cut off Baguio from the rest of Luzon, causing the prices of vegetables in Metro Manila to shoot up shows why we need urban farming.

Besides providing urban dwellers with a steady supply of cheap and fresh vegetables, urban farming will provide them with a means of livelihood. Vegetables coming from the provinces are often very expensive because they pass through at least 15 layers of traders, not to say police checkpoints, before it reaches the consumer. Worse, by the time they arrive in the markets, half have already spoiled, for which reason the traders double their prices to recoup their losses.

At the same time, there are hectares and hectares of idle land in and around the cities and municipalities comprising Metro Manila and other urban areas. One big piece of idle land is a lot sequestered by the Presidential Commission on Good Government. It is located at the corner of C-5 and Ortigas Avenue in Pasig and the PCGG is not doing anything with it. It is just wasting away.

But it is a perfect place for a vegetable garden to be cultivated by street children. It even has some unused buildings that can serve for processing surplus produce and as living quarters for the street children who will join the urban farm. An NGO, KaMMPi Inc., has offered to teach the children how to raise vegetables and run the farm. Its office is at 533 Jade, corner Garnet Lane, Cristimar Village, Antipolo City. The PCGG can reach it through telefax no. 696-0434, or through cell phone 0917-989-5209.

There is another place just outside Metro Manila that can replicate Trinidad Valley in far-away Benguet as a vegetable-growing center and create many jobs. This is the Boso-boso Valley in Antipolo. It has the same climate as Trinidad Valley. It has plenty of water and is surrounded by poultry farms as sources of fertilizer.

A farmer already tried planting cabbage on his half-a-hectare farm. He produced so much that some of the harvest rotted. See the potential of the valley?

With a big vegetable garden so near the metropolis, traders don't have to travel great distances for fresh vegetable supply. Thus, transportation cost would be minimal. Market vendors and even consumers themselves can make the short trip to Boso-boso to buy directly from the farmers.

Boso-boso as a vegetable-growing valley may yet save the remaining trees on the hillsides around it. The squatters who have invaded it are mercilessly cutting down the trees for charcoal. Siltation and pollution have already endangered the Boso-boso River and reservoir which used to be the principal source of drinking water for Manila. With vegetable gardening as a means of livelihood, the squatters don't have to make charcoal anymore. It may even encourage them to plant fruit trees on the bald hillsides.

Fusillades on ramparts

WINDMILLS

is about character.

This brings us to the position of The Manila Times publisher, Dante Ang, who has described himself and his newspaper as "pro-Gloria but not pro-administration." It is not a bad formulation for a honeymoon or a truce. It suggests that while the President will be given support especially during the crisis, the members of her government cannot expect to be extended the same mantle of protection.

It is the natural tendency of Malacañang staffers, for instance, to identify an attack on them as an attack on the president. It isn't. It strains the role of a free press to the breaking point to take that view of a political honeymoon. Exposing malfeasance, stupidity or arrogance in the government ultimately does the president a service. Ignoring it explains why the unlamented "Daily Express" ("Daily Suppress") of the martial law years is no longer with us. And don't forget about the power of rumors.

Having been on both the giving and receiving end of criticism, I am amazed at how some of those who were generous with their criticism while outside government become ultrasensitive to it once they are within. Having also seen how unfair criticism can be for the defenseless public official, I try—though I do not always succeed—to write with restraint. The rest of the arsenal is kept well dry. The fusillades on the ramparts of government will be deliberate and sparing. Exploding shells illuminate but they can also indiscriminately destroy.

I will therefore continue support for the President in this space, even on those occasions, and they will come, when I may have strong personal doubts about the wisdom of a particular course of action. Even then, any cautioning will be low key and friendly. I'll try to stay away from the flight deck.

But individual members of the administration may not escape lightly. Even then, restraint is not an unwise policy. Disagreements can be made politely. Although I have been warned by some that I must resort to pyrotechnics to induce reader interest, it is a course I will not generally follow. But arrogance, triumphalism and sanctimony are exceptions to the rule. In Hamlet's words, "the oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely... the insolence of office..." get my dander up.

Finally, let me quote from Sen. William Pitt Fessenden's famous eulogy delivered in the US Senate upon the death of a colleague in 1866, to remind us about the ordeal that often faces a public servant. He spoke "of how much courage he must possess to resist the temptations which daily beset him; of that sensitive shrinking from undeserved censure which he must learn to control; of the ever-recurring contest between a natural desire for public approbation and a sense of public duty; of the load of injustice he must be content to bear, even from those who should be his friends; the imputations of his motives; the sneers and sarcasms of ignorance and malice; and the manifold injuries which partisan or private malignity, disappointed of its objects, may shower upon his unprotected head."

There are scoundrels here and there but there are also surprisingly large numbers of those invested with public authority who do a good and honorable job under the most trying and thankless conditions. Having been there, even briefly, I will not be the first to fire wanton fusillades on the harassed defenders of the ramparts. But I didn't say anything about warning shots.

Boncodin's reputation for producing money for projects

THE CONSENSUS is that the Cabinet flavors of the season, as far as President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo is concerned, are those who deal with money matters: Budget Secretary Emilia Boncodin and Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho. Boncodin has to balance the budget so that there is money to finance government programs, while Camacho has to keep the peso strong and healthy in relation to other currencies and raise the necessary money, through the two revenue collecting agencies under him, the Bureau of Customs and the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Very much in the hands of these two officials is the fulfillment of many promises made by GMA in her State of the Nation Address.

Insiders concede that Boncodin is very malakas with the President because she is good at looking for the necessary funding for projects. The DBM chief has always been low key, but she was an undersecretary during the Ramos administration, and when Budget Secretary Salvador Enriquez left, she assumed the top post until FVR's exit in June 1998. A business administration and accountancy graduate of the University of the Philippines, where she was a government scholar, Boncodin became an Edward Mason fellow in Harvard University where she earned her MA in public administration. She placed 15th in the CPA board in 1975.

On the other hand, Camacho was a banker for many years before he joined GMA's Cabinet, first as energy chief, where it was his task to explain the controversial administration-certified power bill to the public. NGOs which heard him were impressed by his mastery of the topic. As finance chief, Camacho has to exude an air of confidence in handling the deteriorating peso, and his banking background enables him to play tug-of-war with the banks in propping it up.

The story of the three Payatas kids who wrote the President about their wishes and made their letters into paper boats to float down the Pasig River does seem hard to believe, especially if it's taken to mean that GMA fished them out of the Pasig and read them. At the reception after the Sonas, I queried former Information Minister Greg Cendaña if he believed the children's story and he said it's true, but quickly added with his characteristic naughty wink, "They forgot to put a girl in the group."

From what I gathered, what happened was that many children in Payatas, who were under one of the many NGOs working in the dump, were asked one day to sit down and write what they desired most from the government. They were then asked to make the letters into paper boats and these were floated down the Pasig. Social Welfare Secretary Dinky Soliman heard about it and told the President, who liked the story so much that she asked Soliman to look for the kids. GMA then decided to, as Star columnist Dick Pascual put it, use the kids to put human faces on her speech. Last Monday afternoon, the three kids' parents sat in choice seats at the Batasan and were among the many, including some members of Congress, who shed tears at the sight of the children being given a rousing ovation, together with GMA.

Belinda Olivares-Cunanan

Incidentally, everyone noticed when the Senate opposition on the front row remained seated during the ovation. Joining them on the other side of the hall was Sen. Serge Osmeña, who won as a PPC candidate and voted with the opposition in the election of the Senate president.

Actually, there's another boy from Basilan whose appeal letter actually got to the President by mail. This boy was summoned from Basilan and showed up at the National Peace Congress last weekend at the Ateneo University. He was supposed to join the three Payatas kids for the Sonas, but he was excluded perhaps after the speech was shortened.

Executive Secretary Bert Romulo studiously tabulated the number of applause given to his boss and came up with 91. I told him later that if he cut that by half, that would probably be the number that sprang from the heart of the crowds. That still qualifies GMA's Sonas as the most applauded in history.

Actually, while GMA really worked on that Sonas—there were five Cabinet meetings on it and she practiced its delivery in that cavernous hall at midnight of Sunday, with her speech coach, Repertory Philippines directress Zenaida Amador—administration officials ensured that an appreciative crowd would show up at the Batasan. I've never seen the session hall so packed for a Sonas before (they had to put chairs right on the session floor). The pala applause was initiated always by the same groups.

GMA's Sonas was devoid of the lofty, delicately balanced sentences and elegant turn of phrase that used to characterize President Cory Aquino's Sonas. The soaring rhetoric and elegance befitting Aquino as the icon of Edsa, which she will always be. By contrast, GMA's Sonas was a report to the nation, studded with bullet points of goals and targets, a working speech full of common sense and plain talk, as she put it. It was a tradition that President Ramos started, with his rolled-up barong sleeves. GMA's Sonas sounded very much like her, the unflinching taskmaster driving her people hard to work, work, work, unlike Erap's two Sonas, which belonged to the ghost writer.

I have been following the controversy between First Gentleman Mike Arroyo and resigned Palace correspondence secretary Bing Rodrigo closely. Going for Rodrigo is the fact that she is the daughter of the late Sen. Francisco Rodrigo, a much-loved and respected politician of another generation.

On the other hand, there are two things to consider. The Daily Tribune quoted an unnamed source as opining that most newspapers were wrong when they wrote about Mike Arroyo being given a P50-million bribe for efforts to recall the presidential veto. The fact is, said the Tribune, the bribe was to allow the bill granting a telecommunications franchise to Jaime Dichaves to merely lapse into law. Bills become law when the president fails to act on them within 30 days from submission to Malacañang by Congress. Allowing a bill to lapse into law is very seldom resorted to. One such bill renamed the international airport to the Ninoy Aquino International Airport, and President Cory allowed to let it lapse into law out of delicadeza. Had GMA allowed the franchise bill, which would grant the Dichaves group undue advantage, to lapse into law, about 13 other groups in the industry would have raised a howl. But this is now moot and academic. GMA vetoed the bill.

Another thing to point out is that Mike Arroyo has to be superdumb to take a huge bribe from Dichaves, who was one of Erap's closest cronies. Recall that it was this character who came forward to claim the Velarde account for his own.

A sorry cybertale

AT LARGE

Rina Jimenez-David

our theme, I got her story through e-mail, so take it with the proper caveats.

"I am an avid reader, since college days," "BR" writes by way of introducing herself. "I was a student activist, a self-proclaimed feminist. I am married with three kids, and am now at the crossroads of my life."

"I am an abused wife, if not physically, then emotionally and psychologically. But the abuse became physical last Monday, July 23. It was the second time. My medical certificate shows swelling in my cheek, where I was punched, hematoma on my left and right thigh, my arms, wrists...but my bruises are not enough (proof). No, I should have been in a hospital right now, in a coma, before I will get our society to believe that yes, I am an abused wife."

Her husband, BR writes, is almost "too good to be true." Her own mother refused to believe BR's stories of abuse until she saw him beat up her daughter. "I am a successful professional, a strong character, a survivor...The barangay counselor who heard us at our first hearing said that I just needed a little 'loving-love.' And many people to whom I've told my story believe I should still take him back."

The circumstances of her husband's affair were quite "unusual," writes BR. "He had a cyberaffair. I found the woman's e-mail in his 'secret' e-mail address. They tell me he never really had an actual affair, just letters in the Internet. I saw the letters from him to the girl and from the girl to him. It devastated me just the same had he had the affair with a woman here. My trust in him is shattered."

WHAT hurts most, BR says, is that up to this point her husband still believes he "did nothing wrong." He even justified his cyberaffair by declaring that if he really intended to be unfaithful, he would have had an "actual" affair.

"Maybe, it is about time our family code (is) broadened and updated. Cyberspace is there. Some marriages are shattered because the husband would rather have cybersex than (physical sex) with his living, breathing wife. My marriage is shattered because my husband has been missing and loving some 17-year-old girl 10,000 miles away and not his wife just a few kilometers away working hard to support our family."

"I am the breadwinner of my family. And instead of being cherished for this, I am always tested. He firmly believes that I am an arrogant bitch because I earn in a month what he earns in a year. I never knew until now that a woman's hard work to provide a decent life for her family is an excuse for a husband to beat her and have affairs (cyber and actual) to validate his manhood. Because for sure that is what people say."

"I thought marriage is about two people who are committed to cherish and love each other for all eternity...About saying you are sorry when you hurt somebody, whether you believe you are at fault or not. And if there are times we hurt that somebody we love, we never do it on purpose. But my scars and bruises show that I have been beaten on purpose, regardless of my righteous indignation."

"BR" wants to know: "If I go to court for annulment for psychological incapacity, would the cyberaffair hold water? If I take him back, will I ever trust him again? What is a marriage without faith? Without trust?"

On the first question, "BR," a smart lawyer can provide the answer. For the rest, unfortunately, while friends, family and sympathetic columnists can offer the proverbial shoulder to cry on, the only answers that count will have to come from your heart.

A woman's life

HUMAN FACE

Ma. Ceres P. Doyo

Redford and Dustin Hoffman.

Wrote Graham of that tumultuous chapter in US history and the "transforming event in the life of Washington Post":

"As a story, Watergate was in many ways a journalist's dream—although it didn't seem that way in those first months when we were so alone. But the story had all the ingredients for major drama: suspense, embattled people on both sides, right and wrong, law and order, good and bad."

"Watergate—that is, all of the many illegal and improper acts that were included under that rubric—was a political scandal unlike any other. Its sheer magnitude and reach put it on a scale altogether different from past political scandals, in part because of the unparalleled involvement of so many men so close to the president and because of the large amounts of money raised, stashed, and spent in covert and illegal ways. This was indeed a new kind of corruption in government."

Katharine Graham was described as the "awkward child who grew up amidst material wealth and emotional isolation; the young bride who watched her brilliant charismatic husband—a confidant of John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson—plunge into the mental illness that would culminate in his suicide...the widow who shook off her grief and insecurity to take on a president and a pressman's union as she entered the profane boys' club of the newspaper business."

Graham backed her editors during the Watergate scandal. And when lauded for her courage, she said: "The truth is that I never felt there was much choice.

Courage applies when one has a choice. With Watergate, there was never one major decisive moment when I, or anyone, could have suggested that we stop reporting the story...Once I found myself in the deepest water in the middle of the current, there was no turning back."

Here's more of her story on Watergate, in case you can't get hold of "Personal History":

"It was an unbelievable two years of pressured existence, which diminished only a little as other publications joined us and as the separate investigations and the court cases spawned by Watergate began to confirm our reporting...Watergate threatened to ruin the paper. The Post and the Washington Post Company survived partly because of the great skill and tenacity that our reporters and editors and executives brought to bear throughout the crisis and partly because of luck..."

"Luck was on our side... From the first incident of the guard finding the taped door at the Watergate building, to the police sending to the scene of the crime a beat-up looking undercover car that was cruising in the area rather than a squad car that might have tipped off the burglars, to the sources willing—some even eager—to talk and help...We were lucky that those under investigation compounded their own situation by further mistakes and misassessments. We were lucky we had the resources to pursue the story...We were lucky Nixon was eccentric enough to set up a taping system in the White House, without which he might have completed his term."

But Watergate and Washington Post are only a few chapters in "Personal History." There is so much more about Katharine Graham that is revealed in her memoir.

Graham asks toward the end of her book, "Why dare to write a book? What makes any of us think that someone else would be interested in a story from our own past? For me, there was a mixture of motives..."

Read "Personal History" when you get the chance.

A winner's tale

DO I consider myself a winner? If you consider talent (ahem) and skills, I've had my share of triumphs as a student. I was the 50-meter dash champion in high school, for which I got P20 and a blue banner. I was the champion declaimer during Linggo ng Wika. My prize: a Filipino-English dictionary. Count also my being declared as Best Muse during a basketball tournament. (Oh, okay, it was because I was the only muse who showed up.) I likewise won in a fiesta singing contest and got P300. I became the first prize winner too in our college's English Week Poetry Contest and became P500 richer.

In the beginning

But nothing beats winning contests that hundreds join. My first "official" win was in grade school at St. Scho. My name was picked and the Encyclopedia agents visited our house and sweet-talked my mom into buying a set. Were we lucky or what? Whatever, the thought of being singled out made me feel special.

YOUNGBLOOD

Ma. Lalaine B. Reyes

We want to know what the young are thinking about. What are their thoughts on current issues? We welcome contributions from the twentysomething and below.—Ed.

Being snack junkies, my sisters and I, together with Dad, often go to supermarkets. We join raffles and salivate at the prizes, usually home appliances.

One time, my teacher told me I had won the grand prize, a refrigerator. She had seen my name in the ads. I waited but no letter arrived to inform me I was a winner. But being a kid then, I couldn't care less. Candies, "Voltes V" and taguan pung were more important to me. Maybe it was someone with the same name or they couldn't locate me. I wasn't sure myself if I wrote the correct address on the stub.

Major loot

Recently my friends began to notice how lucky I am. Here is a rundown of the prizes I've won and how I did it:

1. A Swatch watch from Cosmopolitan. I wrote Cosmo, thanking them for featuring women with jobs to die for, saying it made me realize how important it was to pursue a job that one truly loved. My sincerity must have impressed them. My letter was chosen letter of the month, and I won a silver Swatch, which I love!

2. P600 for being Food Magazine's Readers' Best for February. My creation was a hot and spicy beef chili Mexicali soup. I described how this would perk up my friends' mood every time we're feeling blue.

I also made another food entry for my Dad: the chicken fingers he cooks for his apo, Polo, whenever they play together. He won, too. His recipe even landed on the cover with an accompanying picture of them both.

3. Two collector's item pager from Coke's "Always on Time" contest. This is where you have to spot the ATM Coke sign in different shows. Even though my friends and I were embarrassed to death getting Coke cans and wrappers from deserted tables (sometimes not) in malls, we were dead set on winning. I sent colorful envelopes and wrote "Pick Me!" and things like that. I put my entries in different drop boxes to improve my chances—all 30 of them. I got a letter informing me I won. But Coke didn't send me another one when I won again. I only learned about it when a woman whom I met at the Coke office (she herself won a pager) called to inform me that she saw my name again in the newspapers. (What can I say, I'm a friendly gal, giving my phone number away.)

4. George Michael's double CD from Channel V. I just clicked on their contest page, chose the CD I wanted and submitted my name. Did this three times. When I claimed my CD at a post office in Manila, I had to "donate" P30 for the employee's merienda. If I didn't look like a college freshman, I could have been asked P500 for my package.

5. A Nikon Novus camera from MTV. When I was in Subic two summers ago, I saw this girl with her oh-so-tiny camera. I'd have one like that someday, I told myself. So when I saw VJ Sonia Couling hawking a tiny camera for a contest, I immediately e-mailed my entry. I just named the camera and sent a drawing of a skeleton that said, "This could be you waiting for Mr. Right." I explained that the same thing shouldn't happen when you are looking for the perfect camera since Nikon has it. Monette Sison, a former editorial assistant of Sunday Inquirer Magazine was the one who e-mailed me that I won. She had seen my name on MTV.

When I claimed my prize from the Nikon dealer in Quezon City, I was required to pose with the manager. When the picture came out, the manager said he must have been the winner because I looked so embarrassed.

When I met MTV's Sudhanshu Sarronwala, I personally thanked him. Great conversation piece during our interview.

6. Pillow and mug from Channel 2's "Kaybol." Every show, they flashed a question and you paged in your answer. The question that day was: "What's the best japorns on a rainy day?" If you didn't want to win, you can send very predictable answers like "jacket" or "boots." Since I belong to the 2 percent of our population whose ideas are out this world, I answered: "A colorful bathing suit with matching umbrella hat."

7. P50 for The Most Embarrassing Graduation Experience from Meg Magazine. I related how my high school grad pics were exposed and how my hat was bending sideways in all of the pics that were developed. The prize was inconsequential, but it was fun remembering those funny moments.

Gratitude

Why do I always win? Is it because I have so much time in my hands. My timing is perfect, or I am just darn lucky?

I remember that when I was in fourth grade, I won a mug and bag during the school fair. My teacher told me that was because I was good and she predicted that when I grew up, I would be lucky. Prophetic words indeed.

I really have no secret. I just tell myself that I will win and repeat it incessantly. But not to the point of obsessing or offering dead chickens every full moon. Positive thinking is certainly powerful. I couldn't care less what statisticians say about the chances of winning being one in a million.

People are sometimes so cynical that they don't win. They preempt their chances by thinking so negatively.

My family and friends are surprised and excited whenever I win. I'm glad I give them hope which makes them interested in joining contests. My sister won a Fila bag and shirt in a TV contest. Same also with my Dad. My friend Odie won a cell phone from a video rental store.

I have learned that I have a way of weaving words into prize-winning entries. Although I haven't won a house and lot, a BMW or a trip to Disneyland, I am thankful for my little wins.

My advice: If you have the time, what have you got to lose in trying? There are so many opportunities out there: TV, magazines, newspapers, radio, the Internet. Don't join all contests and spend hundreds to qualify. Just choose the contest you want. (I have positive vibes for the contests I join.) Let your mind work, get on with your life but pray like anything!

But if I'm so darn lucky, why do I not try the big leagues, like the lotto? I am working on it. But if I do win, forgive me if I don't write about it.

Ma. Lalaine B. Reyes, 26, rewards herself with her favorite Calbee potato chips whenever she wins. A certified workaholic, she relaxes by cooking, traveling and baby-sitting her hyper nephews, Polo and Chase.

THERE'S THE RUB

Conrado de Quiros

FOR ONE year at least, President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo proposed last Monday, let everyone drop his sword and pick up the ploughshare. Well, she didn't quite put it that way, her speechwriters were not so given to metaphors. What she did say was that for one year at least the politicians may wish to drop their propensity for bickering and unite to pluck the country out of the mire.

Well, I myself wouldn't mind if the senators and congressmen would stop showing themselves to be so obsessed with personal ambition and self-interest and show a little more concern for the country. Shortly before the President delivered her State of the Nation Address, the Senate and the House were in the throes of voting for the Senate president and speaker, and truly the levels of bickering and acrimony were enough to inspire anyone to cry, like the Prince of Verona, "A plague on both your houses!"

I like Frank Drilon, but I cannot applaud the compromises he made to get the Senate presidency. One would imagine that he would have clung a little longer to the lofty ground he had occupied a few months ago by his fine performance in the impeachment trial. To have gone so high and fall so low in so short a time! Ah, but different people have different priorities. Or different valuation of things: most people would not call getting the Senate presidency, by whatever means, a fall. I would.

And though I like Nene Pimentel, I cannot applaud too the compromises he made during the previous administration, compromises that have tarnished his hitherto heroic image as a fighter against tyranny. Of course, his joining Erap's camp assured him of not being a victim again of dagdag-bawas, and indeed of getting the Senate presidency. But I don't know that he wasn't better off protesting the injustice done to him outside the halls of the Senate, and vowing to banish dagdag-bawas from the face of the earth. Right now, I don't know what he is bitter about.

As to Congress, the acrimony might have been less there, but for the representatives to make Joe de Venecia, a man who keeps adding new dimensions to the word trapo (resilience is the newest of them) speaker of the House again, well, that speaks volumes about the quality of their minds.

If this is the kind of politics Ms Macapagal wants the politicians to take a break from for at least one year, I'm all for it. Though while at this, it can't possibly bolster her credibility there that she, the President, was right in the thick of all that political maneuvering or "politicking" in the legislature, making deals, pulling strings, making sure she would get her allies to lead both houses. While of course trying not to openly antagonize anyone (she was for Drilon, but not "publicly"), which is the hallmark of her own brand of politics. Easy to call for peace and unity after waging all the wars and coming out on top.

But even if it were possible, and even if Ms Macapagal were the best person to propose it, I don't know that ceasing hostilities is something we ought to find desirable at all. There are dissensions and dissensions, there are disagreements and disagreements, there are disunities and disunities. It is one thing to differ on the basis of self-interest, it is another to differ on the basis of principle. The one is politicking, the other is principled disagreement. The one is bickering, the other is protesting. And though they are not always so clearly demarcated—principle has been known to be a refuge of scoundrels—there is a line between them.

It is one thing to vote for or against a bill or an issue on party lines, it is another to do so on the strength of convictions. Etta Rosales and Wigberto Tañada typified the second—and it is a testament to our politics that Rosales remains outside Congress' kulambo, and Tañada has had the Senate door slammed on him. Most everybody else in Congress typifies the first.

Why should dissension, disagreement and disunity be naturally bad?

Why should protest and objection and remonstrance be naturally negative? Why shouldn't the senators and representatives protest and object and remonstrate against policies that are pro-business and anti-poor? Why shouldn't the senators and representatives dissent and disagree and take exception to wrongdoing in public office? They would be betraying public trust if they did not.

While at this, that was a remarkable explanation Mike Arroyo gave for why he and Bing Rodrigo traded accusations of bribery. It was a "misunderstanding between friends," he said. He must walk in very strange circles to have friendships like that. I have misunderstandings with journalist friends, too. But I do not accuse them and they do not accuse me of taking bribes—least of all, a P50 million one—when we make tampo with each other. Quite incidentally, someone told me in an e-mail that Ms Macapagal vetoed the bill anyway, so no harm has been done. If I attempted to murder him but unfortunately failed, would he consider me to not have done him harm?

Why should the senators and congressmen not protest something like this? Why should they show their unity by joining a conspiracy of silence? Why should they draw ranks with government to commit iniquity?

By all means let us declare a moratorium on politicking, on voting for or against bills on the basis of loyalty to party (or the fear of it, which is more common), of opposing for the sake of opposing, or for the sake of advancing oneself by bringing the other fellow down. If we can, let us abolish them forever. But let us never stop, or take a respite from, protesting iniquity, from dissenting with injustice, from diverging from the wrong path. Democracy is based on vigilance, not acquiescence. Progress is based on the unity of the just, not the unity of scoundrels.

Erap also called for unity during his time, except that he did not suggest one year but a lifetime. If we had listened to him, Ms Macapagal would not be there at all.

Trying hard

LET'S face it: Ate Glo had serious image problems during her first six months in office. One of my graduate students summarized it succinctly: "She tries to be Erap and Nora Aunor but she's neither Erap nor Nora."

How terribly true. When people tell me about her latest threat to "pulverize" the Abu Sayyaf ("Pupulbusin ko kayo"), I imagine her bringing out a compact to dab powder on the faces of the wicked bandidos. And when she switches to a Nora routine, she seems to model herself after the Nora of the film "Himala," eyes raised to heaven. She in fact invokes God a bit too often: "Let's pray." "Let's leave it to God."

When she inaugurated a Philip Morris cigarette plant in Batangas, she just had to tell the town's residents that the factory was from God as well.

(Philip Morris probably agrees with Ate Glo about its being God's gift to humanity. It has a study claiming that it had saved the Czech government $147 million in 1997, an amount calculated from the savings the government will have because of the number of Czechs who die prematurely from smoking and will no longer need retirement benefits!)

Ate Glo's spin doctors try too hard. There is, for example, this terrible weekly propaganda documentary on government television called "The Working President," the title clearly intended to contrast her with a presumably non-working predecessor. Even worse is this other program (I can't even remember what it's called) which features First Gentleman Mike Arroyo's mercy missions to the poor. Ate Glo's spin doctors should know better. Propaganda just doesn't work in the 21st century—it's crude, it's boring, it insults people's intelligence and, worst of all, it squanders taxpayers' money which could go into creating those jobs Ate Glo promised in her State of the Nation Address (Sona).

Ah, the Sona. Another opportunity for a spin job. It wasn't too bad. The speech itself had the usual rhetoric, but then people do need buzzwords to remember: jobs, homes, education, food. There were some reasonable and concrete targets, for example cutting back the red tape from housing permits from 188 to 45. (Okay, okay, so that's still 45 permits but Ate Glo isn't a miracle worker, notwithstanding her "Himala" demeanor.)

Ate Glo's spin doctors may have tried too hard when they brought out Jayson, Jomar and Erwin, three kids from the urban poor settlement in Payatas. Ms Macapagal explained that the three had sent letters of appeal to her in the form of paper boats, supposedly floating them down the Pasig River. Jayson asked for a chance to finish college, Jomar a permanent job for his father and Erwin for the government to close down Payatas and give the people land.

Filipinos are a sentimental lot, but the paper boats story became the object of ridicule. Sen. Edgardo Angara promptly used the paper boats as a metaphor for the country: "sinkable, walang direksyon." One television anchor tersely commented that it wasn't clear how the paper boats made it to Malacañang through the Pasig River's garbage. (Actually, the boats didn't survive the Pasig but Ate Glo got photocopies of the kids' letters from the NGO that sponsored the activity.)

I am amazed Ate Glo agreed to this rerun of President Ramos' Mang Pandoy gimmick. Back in 1992, Ramos paraded Mang Pandoy, also from an urban poor community, as someone who would be lifted out of poverty as a result of his presidency. But we know Mang Pandoy's life did not improve: he did odd jobs for Ramos but became jobless after Ramos left Malacañang.

I am sure Ate Glo meant it when she promised the boys that she wouldn't let them down. One company has already offered Jayson a college scholarship and I wouldn't be surprised if someone else came up offering a job for Jomar's father. But all this smacks of noblesse oblige, a sense that the rich should occasionally do something for the poor. At best, noblesse oblige is patronizing but more often it becomes offensively condescending, with an implicit message that the poor would be lost without the rich's benevolence.

The three boys raise serious questions about Ate Glo's style of governance. Is she capable of going beyond charity? Is she ready to tackle the structural issues? For starters, what will she do about Erwin's appeal to close down Payatas? Erwin reminds us that it has been more than a year since the Payatas landslide killed at least 150 people (we will never know the actual number since there are still unretrieved bodies). Erwin himself lost a brother, uncles and aunts in that disaster. What will government do now?

If Ate Glo wants a more effective "gimmick" then she should find an Aling Panching or, better still, several Aling Panchings and set them up with self-help schemes. Instead of one-shot doles, she should demonstrate what micro-financing schemes can do. Extend out small loans to several of these Aling Panchings. Our women are famous for stretching the peso, getting small investments rolling to feed their families. An Aling Panching would be able to deliver results by next year's Sona, proving the poor can move forward, without doles. Get the women to talk at next year's Sona about how they battled against all odds, including good-for-nothing husbands like Mang Pandoy, to keep their families surviving.

Yes, Ate Glo tries hard, maybe too hard. It's time she be herself, a leader with a good heart, ready to listen and, more importantly, to learn from the country's poor. As for image-building, I think that if Ate Glo would just forget about the 2004 elections, she'd probably boost her chances of winning when the elections do come around.

People need affordable health services

ON THE OCCASION of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's first State of the Nation Address, the Health Alliance for Democracy (HEAD), an alliance of health organizations, professionals, students and hospital workers, raises its alert call: expensive health care services kill. It calls on the President to increase the national health budget to make health services affordable and accessible to all Filipinos.

Today, 8 out of every 10 Filipinos cannot afford the health care they need. Medical treatment is simply out of reach to the majority of Filipinos despite new technologies and medical breakthroughs. Most cannot even afford adequate food, shelter and clothing for their families.

Health services at government hospitals are now practically for sale. Government hospitals have implemented the fee-for-service scheme and have increased hospital fees by at least 20 percent. The average hospital bill is three times the average monthly wage of an ordinary Filipino. Even the prices of medicines in the Philippines is 18 times those in India and Canada where citizens have higher incomes than Filipinos.

With massive impoverishment and no economic relief in sight, the moral imperative to stop the commercialization of health services and the corporatization of public hospitals is urgent. The Macapagal administration's concern for the masa and the entire Filipino people should be manifested through the allocation of 5 percent of the gross national product to the national health budget. This will make health services affordable and accessible to all Filipinos.—DR. JOSEPH CARABEO, secretary general, Health Alliance for Democracy, 233 Mayon cor. N. Roxas Sts., Quezon City

'Dagdag presyo, bawas serbisyo'

WE, of the Freedom from Debt Coalition strongly oppose Maynilad's petition for a water rate increase of P5 per cubic meter.

First, we find Maynilad's proposed water rate hike totally unacceptable. Maynilad's creative presentation of its data through TV and print advertisements that intend to condition the public's mind on its proposed increase is highly deceptive. Maynilad would have us believe that its one-half centavo per liter rate increase has a negligible effect on the pockets of consumers. According to them, the increase would translate into a mere P20 or a pack of cigarettes for the urban poor. For the "middle class," the increase would simply mean P85 or a movie ticket.

The value of money for Maynilad's PR agents and officials is obviously different from that of the ordinary consumers. To ordinary households consuming 30 cubic meters, P85 is already transportation money for three schoolchildren. To the vendor selling cigarettes in the streets, this amount is already a day's income. To the urban poor family who can only afford the poor's staple food, "instant noodles," this means forgoing their meals for two days.

There is another thing that Maynilad's deceptive advertisements do not say. That is, the one-half centavo per liter increase that it is asking from us adds up to billions and billions of pesos for it. In short, Maynilad wants to make big money out of little people. If the rate hike was so inconsequential, then why is Maynilad going around the concession agreement just to have the increase approved?

Furthermore, Maynilad has not even justified the water rate increase that it deems so small. It has yet to show the numbers and the basis for the P5 rate increase.

Beyond the amount of the proposed rate increase, we reject Maynilad's petition because it violates the 1997 concession agreement between the Metropolitan Waterworks and Sewerage System and Maynilad.

The agreement states that actual losses incurred by Maynilad should be recovered throughout the life span of the contract. This means that the justifiable losses of Maynilad must be recovered over the remaining life of the contract or 21 years.

However, Maynilad wants to go around the agreement and trick the consumers by proposing the recovery of its so-called losses in a short period of one and a half years or 18 months.

The FDC maintains that the extraordinary price adjustment (EPA) allowed by the concession agreement is a sufficient mechanism that Maynilad should use for its proposed price increase. Whatever increase Maynilad wants should go through the EPA process. The EPA process was precisely designed because of the nature of the business that Maynilad is in. Providing quality water and expanding water services require long-term capital. Maynilad's participation in the bidding process, which it eventually won, meant that it was willing to put in big capital and that it understood that this capital could not be immediately recovered. Maynilad's petition for the acceleration of the recovery of its losses, therefore contradicts the spirit and principle of the contract.

The P5 rate increase does not guarantee improved and expanded services. On the contrary, Maynilad even intends to scale down its performance targets. Along with its petition for a rates increase, Maynilad is also asking for the postponement of its service obligations. In other words, dagdag presyo, bawas serbisyo.

Overall, we find Maynilad's petition for a water rate increase deceptive, illegal and unjust. Maynilad should take responsibility for its business decisions and should not compel consumers to cover its losses.

We warn the Regulatory Office, led by Chief Regulator Rex Tan Tiongco, from giving in to the unacceptable demands of Maynilad. As a government entity, the Regulatory Office should ensure that Maynilad doesn't succeed in cheating on the concession agreement and in swindling the consumers.—MA. Which brings me back to my point: If in marriage, love dies, could it be that the problem lies not with marriage itself as an institution but rather in that we do not love as we should?

And if we do not know how to love, how in the world can divorce resolve this? By giving us a second chance? Or a third? Or a fourth?

If the problem is not marriage but love, why change the rules of marriage? Wouldn't it be more effective to change the way we love?

Clearly, with the move for the divorce bill, we are barking up the wrong tree.—STEPHANIE OLIVARES, Muntinlupa City exist because they have gained public support over the years.

• Failure of the police to implement laws (yes, they do occupy public space). Public property should not be used for private purposes, according to Article 424 of the Civil Code. But as Azanza put it, we have "flawed police services." Vendors give protection money to avoid being arrested. They have their own ways of informing one another about impending raids. These vendors unite to save their only source of income.

These people cannot be seen as a problem, or as something apart from our community. This underground economy is already blended into Filipino society. These vendors make Quiapo, Quiapo.—GERRMAI ABELLA, University of the Philippines, Diliman, Quezon City

Marriage based on love endures

CONRADO de Quiros wrote in his July 16, 2001 column: "Where I stand, or lie down, the only sacred thing in marriage is that man and wife love each other. That is gone, and there is nothing sacred in it. There's just a piece of paper signed by a minor clerk in city hall or a priest who was in a hurry to perform the next sacrament to improve his income."

A piece of paper—that's what this whole debate on divorce boils down to. The problem is that marriage is not seen as something holy, permanent and indissoluble anymore. It is not seen as something worth fighting for. If the love is gone, then let's shake hands, say goodbye and move on. Divorce is the answer to marital woes—or so they think.

Philosopher Alice von Hildebrand once said that "a mediocre view of marriage leads to a mediocre marriage—and mediocrity dooms marriage." She added: "Only extremely high ideals about marriage will enable couples to get through the hard times. When the sea is rough, it's doubly important for the captain to keep his eyes fixed on the lighthouse marking the safe harbor. The beauty and greatness of marriage should be your constant beacon, precisely because you're still so far from the shore."

What's happening, though, is quite the opposite. We've developed such a shabby view of marriage—as can be seen from the opinion that marriage is just a piece of paper—so it's no wonder that divorce seems to be the most reasonable solution to an age-old quandary.

Yet, could it not be that the problem is not marriage itself? Could it not be that the problem lies in the fact that we do not know what love is and we do not know how to love as we should?

"When love is gone..." four words which make me think, and think a lot. What kind of love is here now but gone tomorrow? It does not sound like love at all. Isn't love, the very idea of it, unconditional and for always? Otherwise it wouldn't be love. It may be a momentary high, a temporary shot of happiness or some fleeting pleasure. But not love.

True love endures. It lasts longer than a battery because it is more than a feeling. It is a choice. It is an act of the will and not the result of emotions. Thus, it can persist despite and in spite of one's feelings or moods. Love doesn't just suddenly die. There had been, prior to its "death," many little choices of selfishness, ego and pride. Real love knows how basis of these indicators. Also, over time, these ambulant vendors have developed certain languages, symbols and rules that each must respect so everyone can receive benefits. Examples are: their sense of territoriality, competition while cooperating in other matters such as protecting each other from getting arrested and pakikisama.

• Public support. There are many people who patronize them with the thought of getting the most for their money. I saw a lot of buyers in Quiapo, some looking for goods sold in malls but sold cheaper there, others looking for products that can only be found in Quiapo. A few women were trying to take a peek at their future, while devotos were buying religious paraphernalia. These vendors somehow continue to recruiting members. No one can just decide to sell there.

How can this subculture be formed amid the chaotic environment of Quiapo? An in-depth sociological study was made by Patrick Azanza of the University of the Philippines in Diliman some years back on these vendors. In his study titled, "Subculture of Ambulant Vendors in Quiapo," three major points were presented as to the existence of this subculture:

• Socialization of the vendors and the continuous support to the norms they developed. The members of this so-called social organization were brought together by several factors: family orientation, friendly relations, geographic linkages and religious affiliation. Those who become members were usually recruited on the

Vendors' subculture in Quiapo

I FIND it difficult to walk through the streets of Quiapo because of the numerous vendors on the sidewalks and at times in the middle of the streets. When I walk on Evangelista, Quezon Boulevard, P. Paterno and Esperanza, it is impossible not to notice these vendors with their portable tables and chairs, offering an infinite variety of goods.

At first, I thought these vendors were disorganized, even chaotic. But of course I was wrong. In fact, these Quiapo vendors have developed their own modus vivendi which most of us may not quite understand. They have formed a subculture.

These people trying to earn a living by using the space provided for the public can already be described as a social organization. They have a hierarchy and they have a way of

Croat Army general surrenders

ZAGREB, Croatia—A Croatian Army general flew to the Netherlands yesterday to surrender to the UN war crimes tribunal and face charges that he oversaw a wartime campaign that killed about 70 Serb civilians and left hundreds of homes in ashes.

Gen. Rahim Ademi is the first Croat to face accusations stemming from the 1991-95 Serbo-Croat war. One of the more gruesome atrocities involved 10 Croatian soldiers who sprayed an 84-year-old blind woman with gunfire as she sat on the porch of her home, the United Nations alleged in a report.

Wearing his military uniform decorated with medals, Ademi, his wife, Anita, and his lawyer took a regular Croatian Airlines flight to Amsterdam. He was to be taken from Amsterdam's airport to the tribunal in The Hague.

Because he decided to surrender voluntarily, Ademi boarded the flight without handcuffs or a police guard. His two daughters were at the airport to bid him farewell.

"I am proud of my role in the war," he said before he left. "I am not afraid of The Hague court's accusations—I have done nothing wrong in the war and I will prove it there. My conscience is completely clear."

The tribunal indicted Ademi along with another high-ranking Croatian officer and demanding that both suspects be handed over for trial. Croatia's pro-Western government agreed to comply, but its decision triggered fierce protests by veterans and nationalists who supported the late President Franjo Tudjman. They see Croatian fighters as heroes and patriots, not criminals.

Many Croats have struggled to come to grips with the indictments of military leaders they believe saved the country from Serb forces who indiscriminately shelled villages and cities, killed thousands of civilians and expelled many more from their homes.

The second suspect—widely believed to be retired Gen. Ante Gotovina—has indicated a refusal to surrender, and his loyalists have threatened unrest if he is arrested. A warrant has been issued for his arrest, but he remains at large.

Although the tribunal's indictments of the two remain sealed, the charges against Ademi are believed to stem from a 1993 government offensive in southwestern Croatia, an operation aimed at regaining territory seized by Serb rebels during the 1991 independence war.

Under pressure from the West, Croatian troops withdrew from the recaptured territories soon afterward. The United Nations later charged that retreating Croatian forces burned down villages, set hundreds of Serb homes ablaze and killed about 70 Serb civilians in an area known as the Medak pocket.

Atlantis returns

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida—Space shuttle Atlantis swooped through the night sky and touched down smoothly, completing its mission to install a new air lock for spacewalkers at the international space station. The shuttle and its five astronauts landed on the floodlit runway at Kennedy Space Center late Tuesday after a one-day delay caused by rain. "Boy, did we have a really good flight," astronaut Janet Kavandi said early yesterday after emerging from Atlantis. "It was hard work. It was great work. It was probably the most satisfying thing that I've ever done," added James Reilly II, who took part in the mission's three spacewalks. The space station and its three residents were soaring high above the Atlantic when the shuttle ended its 13-day, 8 million-kilometer journey. The clouds were high and sparse and there was no rain around. A line of showers had prevented the shuttle from landing Tuesday morning. It was only the 18th space shuttle touchdown in darkness in 20 years. Infrared cameras showed the incoming spaceship as a ghostly white blur from as far out as 113 km.

Profile of Chandra

WASHINGTON—The FBI plans to sit down with Rep. Gary Condit to create a profile of Chandra Levy as it seeks a fresh approach to cracking the mystery surrounding the former federal intern's disappearance three months ago. Lawyers for Condit, a California Democrat, agreed Tuesday for their client to speak with FBI profilers after a new agent assigned to the case offered to do it without questions from local police, according to sources familiar with the FBI's contact with the congressman. The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the session could occur as early as this week, depending on Condit's schedule. The sources said the FBI told Condit's lawyers they intended to conduct the session without Washington police present. City police have interviewed Condit three times and recently expressed interest in a fourth interview with him. A police source said Condit, 53 and married, said in his third interview with police that he had an affair with the 24-year-old former intern. He has denied any role in her disappearance and, according to his lead lawyer, passed a lie detector test administered by a former FBI expert hired by the Condit team.

Priest's disclosure

NEW YORK—A man jailed 12 years for murder was freed after a priest testified that another man had confessed to the crime long ago. US District Judge Denny Chin threw out Jose Morales' conviction Tuesday and released him without bail. "I feel good," Morales said as he left the courthouse. Prosecutors said they would fight to reinstate the conviction. Morales, 31, was found guilty in 1988 of beating and stabbing to death Jose Antonio Rivera in the South Bronx neighborhood of New York City. At a hearing last week, the Rev. Joseph Towle testified that another neighborhood gang member, Jesus Fornes, had told him in 1989 that he and two other people—but not Morales—were involved in the slaying.

Human cloning

WASHINGTON—The US House judiciary committee has approved a bill that would prohibit human cloning, following a lengthy debate that also delved into stem cell research. In passing the bill Tuesday, lawmakers said they wanted to keep scientists from applying the same technique on humans that was used to clone Dolly the sheep in 1997. The measure, approved 18-11, now goes before the full House of Representatives. Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson praised the committee, saying its action puts Congress on the right track toward prohibiting the cloning of human beings.

In good spirits

RAMA, Ontario—Ringo Starr said Tuesday that fellow former Beatle George Harrison was in good spirits the last time they were together, and that he probably would have been notified if Harrison was near death. "I saw him three weeks ago and he's doing great," Starr told a news conference at Casino Rama, an entertainment complex 100 km north of Toronto where Starr's latest band begins a North American tour this week. "He has had an operation, we can't deny that," Starr said of Harrison, who recently was treated for a brain tumor. "He's recouping and his spirits were high. That's all I have to say on it." On Monday, Harrison and his wife Olivia rejected a London newspaper report that he was close to death. The report attributed the information to former Beatles producer George Martin.

Taiwan cuts pay of foreign workers

TAIPEI—Taiwan is going to make foreign labor cheaper for local industries amid a domestic slowdown by reducing their monthly wage by 16 percent from September, officials said yesterday.

"Foreign workers will have NT$2,500 (US$71.68) deducted from their monthly wage as payment for room and board, but they will be compensated by paying less fees to manpower brokers," said the Cabinet Secretary General Chiou I-jen.

The current minimum wage for foreign workers in Taiwan is NT$15,840 a month, but the actual cost for employers often runs up to as much as NT$20,000 with room and board added, according to the Council of Labor Affairs.

Chiou said Taiwan was currently in talks with Thailand, the Philippines, Indonesia and Vietnam on the issue and they had in principle agreed to the wage reduction in exchange for lower brokerage fees to manpower agencies on both sides.

In other words, the brokering fees shouldered by foreign workers will be slashed by NT$6,000 in Taiwan and another NT$6,000 in the country where they come from.

"The wage reduction is expected to be implemented as early as September," a CLA official said.

Taiwanese employers are expected to save as much as NT$824 million a month from the wage reduction, raising concerns that more employers would prefer to hire foreign workers over local ones amid a record jobless rate.

The island's unemployment rate reached an all-time high of 4.51 percent in June as graduates began their search for jobs in the midst of the economic slowdown.

However, the CLA official said the government's efforts to tighten labor imports would prevent further increases in alien workers.

Taiwan is expected to limit the number of foreign domestic helpers allowed in at 120,000 and reduce the number of alien workers in the manufacturing and construction sectors by 15,000 each year in order to create more jobs for local residents, he said.

Foreign workers will also be barred from taking part in the country's new major public projects announced earlier this year, he added.

Taiwan's total population of foreign workers—mostly come from Thailand, the Philippines, Indonesia and Vietnam—hit a new record of 329,612 in June, up 812 from May.

The number of foreign domestic helpers rose 1,145 month-on-month to a record of 102,804 in June, but the number of foreign workers in the manufacturing and construction sectors fell 597 to 214,304 over the same period.

Asean meet clouded by US-China spy row

HANOI—Top diplomats from the United States, China and a collection of Asian and European nations began security talks yesterday clouded by Beijing's convictions of an American and two US residents on spying charges.

US Secretary of State Colin Powell was expected to discuss the spying cases with Chinese Foreign Minister Tang Jiaxuan Wednesday afternoon on the fringes of the Asean Regional Forum, a meeting of the 10-member Association of Southeast Asian Nations and its 23 "dialogue partners"—including the United States, China, Russia, North and South Korea and the European Union.

The cases also have complicated Powell's trip to Beijing later this week, which had been seen as a chance to smooth relations already roiled by the US spy plane incident, US plans for a missile defense system, and human rights disputes.

Despite the dispute, Thailand's foreign ministry spokesperson, Norachit Sinhaseni, said Asian nations were anticipating an improvement in ties between Beijing and Washington.

"We would like to see the United States and China resume normal diplomatic discussions and that seems to be the direction and we welcome that development very much," Norachit said.

In a statement Tuesday, Asean foreign ministers said stable relations among the major powers, "particularly the US and China," were important to peace in the region.

Both China and the United States play key security roles in the region that claims more than half a billion people and some of the world's most critical sea lanes. The ministers hope to persuade Powell that Washington should keep attention on Southeast Asia even as North Asia consumes more of its diplomatic resources.

Powell assured the group that the Asia-Pacific "is a priority for the new administration," a participant said.

Regarding US relations with China, Powell said the United States "remains engaged and also this is a priority," he said.

Typhoon lashes Hong Kong

HONG KONG—The outer edge of Typhoon "Yutu" lashed Hong Kong with gusting winds and rain early yesterday, disrupting transportation by land, sea and air and closing financial markets and other businesses as it churned toward mainland China.

Squalls knocked down several trees, and small chunks of masonry broke off of some old buildings and fell to the ground, smashing car windows.

At least 115 people took refuge in emergency shelters, but there were no immediate reports of serious damage or injuries from the second storm to shut down Hong Kong in less than three weeks.

Yutu, which means "jade rabbit" in Mandarin Chinese, was packing maximum winds of 150 kilometers per hour and located about 180 km south-southwest of Hong Kong at noon, the Hong Kong Observatory said.

Winds in Hong Kong gained strength as Yutu moved closer in the late morning, but the storm appeared to be on course to hit the coast of China's Guangdong province southwest of here.

Hong Kong's outlying island of Cheung Chau had winds of 65 kilometers per hour with gusts of up to 115 kilometers per hour and some areas received up to 40 mm of rain in the morning, the observatory said.

Lewd phones seized

KUALA LUMPUR—Malaysian police seized mobile phone covers depicting naked celebrities which lit up certain parts of their bodies when the phone rang, a newspaper reported yesterday.

Raids on sellers of the covers were included in a crackdown on pornography in Seremban, 60 km south of Kuala Lumpur.

The covers, showing nude pictures of Asian movie and pop music stars, sell for between $6.60-13.20.

Covers showing naked pictures of Hollywood stars fetch higher prices.

Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad recently announced a nationwide crackdown on pornographic material, saying he was worried about its effect on society.

Police said 12 people were arrested and 71 premises raided in Seremban and nearby towns in a seven-day statewide operation that started Monday.

Anwar hits delaying tactics

KUALA LUMPUR—Jailed politician Anwar Ibrahim's lawyer yesterday accused the Malaysian government of delaying tactics in his appeal to be allowed overseas for medical treatment.

Sankar Nair said the government had not responded to a demand made more than a month ago to allow Anwar abroad or face legal action.

"We can't apply to the courts unless we have exhausted all avenues of appeal," Sankar told reporters. "But three weeks after acknowledging receipt of our appeal, we have not heard anything from the government." AP

General backs idea of 'killer teams' vs pushers

BANGKOK—A police general yesterday denied that special death squads were planning to kill 1,000 drug traffickers this year, and had already sent "350 to hell."

Lt. Gen. Pichai Sunthornsajjagul said he merely supported the idea of "killer teams" to wipe out drug dealers as proposed by a group in the army which he did not name.

The English-language The Nation quoted Pichai as saying police-backed death squads in northeastern Thailand were targeting drug runners for execution and had already killed 350 in an operation dubbed "Shortcut to Hell."

Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra yesterday said that "a lot of ideas have come up" to cope with the deluge of narcotics but denied that extra-judicial executions would be used. "We have to consider human rights and rights under the Constitution," he said.

Pichai, who heads the northeast region No. 4, said the 1,000 figure was the number of suspected drug traffickers in his area of command. "Hundreds of these people were arrested but managed to use the dirty money they gained from the narcotics business to buy their way out from jail," he said. "So the only way to stop the drugs plague is to get rid of them."

"I support the idea of setting up killer teams to terminate these people, provided that there is a law to support such actions of such teams," Pichai said in a telephone interview.

"Hunting in my sense is to search and arrest and send them to court. The police use guns only when suspects open fire on them," he said.

The general said more than 300 such suspects had been killed in drug-related cases in the past four years in his region.

He said his area of responsibility covered 11 provinces with a total population of more than 11 million people.

Trafficking and abuse of narcotics and methamphetamines is regarded as one of Thailand's major problems and Thaksin recently declared an all-out war on drugs. Most of the drugs are smuggled in from neighboring Burma, also known as Myanmar.

Alien hunters scan heavens for pulses from ET civilizations

LOS ANGELES—Not content to just listen for aliens, a group of California scientists has begun looking for them, too.

For years, the search for extraterrestrial intelligence—commonly known as SETI—has focused on sifting through the radio or microwave transmissions that stream toward Earth from all quarters of the universe. By crunching the data, scientists hope to detect signals generated by alien civilizations.

Now, scientists at the SETI Institute, the University of California's Berkeley and Santa Cruz campuses and the Lick Observatory have expanded their search to include a hunt for fleeting flashes of laser light. Using 102-cm telescope at Lick, they are hunting for pulses as brief as one-billionth of a second that emanate from star systems hundreds of light-years away.

"It's a very long shot, but it's very inexpensive to do," said Frank Drake, the SETI Institute's board chair.

The optical hunt requires use of an existing telescope and about $10,000 worth of equipment. In contrast, the group is building a $26-million array to enhance its search for radio signals.

If the optical project does detect a pulse, it's not clear what meaningful two-way communication could ensue. Laser pulses, traveling at the speed of light, can take hundreds if not thousands of years to travel between the stars.

"If you do get in touch, the conversation is going to be tedious," said Seth Shostak, a SETI Institute astronomer.

The idea of hunting for alien laser pulses has been around for 40 years, or nearly as long as the laser itself. In the United States, teams based at Harvard University, Princeton University, Berkeley and in Columbus, Ohio, are conducting optical searches.

Unlike radio-focused efforts, a successful optical hunt would require catching an alien civilization deliberately targeting Earth with a laser beacon or pulse.

If radio SETI is listening for a shout from an individual in a crowd, its optical counterpart is looking for a subtle wink.

"With radio, generally speaking, signals tend to spread out more—you don't have to target your receiver. With optical receivers, you have to know where the guy is on the other end," Shostak said.

The system installed at the Lick observatory uses three light detectors, called photomultipliers, hooked up to its Nickel Telescope. AP

New Dumaguete bishop

DUMAGUETE CITY—Rev. Antonio Franco, Apostolic Nuncio to the Philippines, has installed Msgr. John Du as the new bishop of the Diocese of Dumaguete. About 40 bishops and 200 priests from all over the country witnessed Du's installation during a Holy Mass on July 18 at the Cathedral Church here. For Comelec resolution

DUMAGUETE CITY—The Commission on Elections will soon resolve a petition filed by the Board of Canvassers (BOC) of Tanjay City to nullify the proclamation of Councilor Felix Barot and to instead proclaim Dr. Rolando Tabaloc as the city's 10th councilor. Tanjay Election Supervisor Erlinda Nocheffranca said the Comelec ordered the case submitted for resolution after the parties gave their side during a special hearing in Manila. The hearing was called after the Tanjay BOC filed a petition to correct what the board said was an error in the canvassing of votes that resulted in Barot's proclamation. Alex Pal, PDI Visayas Bureau

4 killed in bus fall

BACOLOD CITY—Four persons were killed and five others injured on Monday when a cargo truck they were riding in plunged into a 450-foot ravine in San Carlos City, 144 kilometers east of this city. The fatalities were identified as engineer Susan Delima, Felix Ortega, Armi Mar Delima and Renato Nicor. A police report said the victims were on their way to deliver construction materials to the Cabagtas Elementary School in Barangay Prosperidad, San Carlos City. Truck driver Zaldy Real was negotiating an uphill road in Sitio Ducog-ducog, Barangay Rizal when he lost control of the vehicle. Zaldy and four of his passengers jumped out of the truck as it fell into the ravine. The four others, however, were not as lucky. Carla Gomez, PDI Visayas Bureau

3 slay suspects killed

DAVAO CITY—Police killed three amulet-wearing men suspected to be behind the slaying of a tricycle driver in Matan-ao, Davao del Sur on Sunday. Killed were Silvestre Brocka Jr., Michael Cawas and Bonifacio Fabra, suspects in the slaying of tricycle driver Ireneo Fernandez, 46, of Dolo, Bansalan. Reports reaching the regional police command here revealed that Fernandez was driving his tricycle on Bonifacio Street in Bansalan when the three men shot and killed him. Responding policemen later killed the assailants. Anthony Allada, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Intelligence operatives from the provincial and municipal police, led by Supt. Oscar Albayalde, caught Urcino Muli, brother of Bataan board member Federico Muli, in the act of selling a two-gram sachet of shabu to SP04 Eduardo Bartolo on Monday. Police later discovered at least 750 grams of shabu, packed in seven plastic bags, in Muli's car. Tonette Orejas, PDI Central Luzon Desk

The presence of hepatitis B in blood was also the most common reason volunteers were not allowed to donate their blood. Dr. Teresita Plaza, former head of the Regional Blood Bank based here, said prior to her retirement, the blood bank laboratory detected 12 hepatitis B cases out of 100 blood samples. Rey Nasol, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Hatchery inaugurated

PAMPANGA, the No. 1 producer of tilapia in the country today, finally got its own provincial fish hatchery with the inauguration of the hatchery at the Pampanga Agriculture College (PAC) grounds in Magalang town recently. Agriculture Secretary Leonardo Montemayor and Pampanga Rep. Oscar Rodriguez led ribbon-cutting rites for the P1.95 million structure that will produce quality tilapia fingerlings for Central Luzon. The project was made possible through a P1.7 million fund from the provincial government, breeders from the National Freshwater Fisheries Technology Center and P250,000 from the Bureau of Fisheries and Aquatic Resources. The PAC donated the site for the hatchery.

Kidnappers abandon boy as police conduct stakeout

AND CONNIE FERNANDEZ
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—Police yesterday rescued the 11-year-old son of a Chinese-Filipino businessman just two days after he was kidnapped on his way to school.

Ryan James Yu was recovered about 9:15 a.m. inside an apartment on Salinas Drive Extension, Barangay Lahug, less than a kilometer from the area where he was seized on Monday.

Chief Supt. Avelino Razon, police director for Central Visayas, said the kidnappers abandoned the boy after they noticed that policemen were conducting a stakeout in the area.

"The pressure of the police forced (the kidnappers) to abandon the boy... even if no ransom was paid," he told reporters yesterday.

Five of the kidnappers' accomplices, who were supposed to get the P1.5-million ransom at the Davao International Airport from the boy's father, were arrested about 4 p.m. yesterday.

Police identified them as Roberto Galope, 46, of General Santos City; Henry Hernandez, 33, and his brother, Efrén, 39, of Davao; Jovencio Camado, 30, Davao del Sur; and Edgar Manimo, 24, of Digos City. Recovered from the suspects were hand grenades, a .38 cal. revolver and a fan knife.

Ryan James, who appeared shaken by his ordeal, was with his mother, Zenia, when he was presented to journalists yesterday afternoon.

He refused to answer questions. The boy has bruises on the cheeks and hands, and a deep cut in the forehead where he was pistol-whipped by one of the kidnappers.

Supt. George Corpuz, head of the Special Task Group (Stag), which was the lead agency in the case, said the kidnappers belong to a gang from Mindanao.

He said the Yu kidnapping was the group's "test case" to determine if they could operate in the Visayas, especially in Cebu.

Motorcycle-riding men kidnapped Ryan James, a Grade 5 pupil of the St. Francis of Assisi School, in Peace Valley, Barangay Lahug, while he and a family helper, Joel Bation, were walking on their way to school about 7 a.m. on Monday.

One of the kidnappers pistol-whipped the boy in the head when he resisted. The victim was unconscious when he was transferred to a waiting white Kia Pride car in Barangay Sudlon, about 100 meters from the site of the abduction.

Contrary to earlier reports, Corpuz said the boy's parents immediately cooperated with the police.

The kidnappers initially demanded a ransom of P50 million. They lowered the amount to P10 million, then to P5 million, and later to P1.5 million.

While the negotiations were going on, Corpuz said the police conducted a stakeout along Kalye Asul after receiving a tip that the white Kia Pride car was spotted in the area.

He added that they also began to suspect that two groups were involved in the operation after tracing calls made by the kidnappers to the parents.

Two of the calls, during which Zenia was able to talk to Ryan James, were traced in Lahug. The rest of the calls, Corpuz said, were made in Davao City.

"The kidnappers wanted to bring the boy to Mindanao. But they cannot pull out because of the police stakeout," Corpuz said.

About 5 a.m. yesterday, the parents agreed that the P1.5-million payoff be made about 3 p.m. at the Davao airport.

But sources said the boy's keepers in Lahug had abandoned the boy as early as 3 a.m. after they felt that the policemen were closing in on them.

About 7 a.m. yesterday, the boy was able to untie himself and tried to go out of the house. A pedicab driver saw him and immediately informed the police.

The policemen went to the apartment and took the boy. Corpuz said they still continued negotiations with the Davao group.

About 1 p.m. yesterday, a group of policemen flew to Davao to entrap the bagmen. At the same time, another team conducted pursuit operations against the Cebu group. With a report from Anthony Allada, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Ex-Bacolod gov not spared from dengue plague

BY CARLA GOMEZ
PDI Visayas Bureau

BACOLOD CITY—A former governor became the latest victim of dengue fever, which has killed three persons and downed more than 400 others in Negros Occidental this year.

Former Gov. Rafael Coscolluela was rushed to the Riverside Medical Center on Monday after his platelet count dropped to 25,000.

On Tuesday afternoon, Coscolluela underwent blood transfusion after his platelet count further decreased to 19,000.

The normal platelet count of a man is 150,000 to 250,000, said Dr. Ernesto Malvas, Negros Occidental health officer.

Malvas said a dengue victim could start bleeding internally or blood could come out of his nose or ears when his platelet count dropped below the normal level.

If a dengue victim is not immediately attended to, he added, he or she could die of shock due to blood loss.

Although Coscolluela has not suffered any bleeding, he said, "the fact remains that laboratory findings shows a decreasing platelet count so we have to be vigilant."

Coscolluela is one of the 190 persons afflicted with dengue fever in Bacolod City in July.

From January to July, 422 dengue cases were reported in the province's 11 cities and 14 towns, records from the Provincial Health Office said.

Of the number, 310 cases were reported in Bacolod.

Three persons have died of the disease. The fatalities were from the cities of Victorias, Bacolod and Kabankalan.

In Silay City, 25 dengue cases have been reported: Kabankalan, 24; Bago, 10; Cadiz, 10; Talisay, 6; Victorias, 5; Sagay, 5; La Carlota, 3; San Carlos, 2; and Himamaylan, 1.

Two cases each were reported in the towns of Binalbagan, Hinigaran, Calatrava, Murcia and Sipalay. One case each was reported in the towns of Cauayan, E.B. Magallona, Isabela, La Castellana, Manapla, Moises Padilla, Pulupandan and San Enrique.

Three cases were reported in Toboso town.

Although the number of cases has increased, Malvas said the disease has not yet reached epidemic proportions in the province.

Malvas said his office was encouraging the public to get rid of possible breeding places of the Aedes aegypti mosquito in their surroundings and maintain cleanliness in homes and communities.

Among the common breeding places of the dengue-carrying mosquitoes are flower vases, roof gutters, old tires, coconut husks and empty cans and bottles.

Dr. Edileon Isidto, city health officer, said his office had been conducting an education campaign to stop the spread of the disease.

Politicians ride on anti-dengue plans

BAYOMBONG, Nueva Vizcaya—Local politicians constantly try to make themselves "look good" in front of their supporters even during a dengue epidemic.

Health officials here revealed that politicians preferred fumigation among various methods to fight dengue fever as "a way of (earning) publicity" because it was visible and noticed by residents.

"Siyempre, pogi points. Fogging has become the choice because naturally, these make them more popular," a Nueva Vizcaya health official, who requested anonymity, said.

He said they have received requests for fumigation from town officials as cases of dengue started to rise in their areas in the past months.

According to a report released by the Regional Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit (Resu) of the Department of Health here, the number of dengue cases in Cagayan Valley increased by 42 percent from last year's figures.

Latest DOH figures recorded 236 cases of dengue in the region, with Cagayan posting the highest number with 93 cases, including one fatality from Iguit town.

Nueva Vizcaya recorded 70 cases, "more than (the) expected (figure) over the past six years," the Resu report said.

Worst affected by the outbreak were Tuguegarao City in Cagayan and Roxas, Isabela, with 22 cases each; and Bambang and Solano, both in Nueva Vizcaya, with 19 and 14 cases, respectively.

Compared with the incidence in the past six years, dengue fever in the region has become more widespread, according to the DOH, with 162 affected barangays in 57 towns.

Most patients, the DOH report indicated, were babies and children aged 1-9.

With health services crippled by lack of funds, officials said local governments would have to shoulder the fumigation expenses.

A single mixture of a liter of Resigen diluted in 40 liters of diesel fuel costs around P3,400, which is barely enough to cover an area of two town blocks.

But according to Dr. Ferdinand Tolentino, Nueva Vizcaya health officer, "environmental sanitation is still the most effective means (to fight dengue)."

Fogging may not be totally effective against the main carriers of dengue, the Aedes aegypti and Aedes albopictus mosquitoes, as it only drives the mosquitoes away and into other areas, he said.

"Worse, we get more requests as it triggers envy among residents," Tolentino said. The regional DOH-Resu said it has alerted its field personnel to intensify the information campaign on how to prevent and control dengue.

"We continue to reiterate to the people that sanitation is still the best measure against dengue and not fogging or spraying," Tolentino said. "Aside from being far less costly, it is a more permanent preventive measure for a dengue epidemic."

411 Lucena City workers dismissed

LUCENA CITY—The city government has dismissed 411 of its more than 700 casual employees to rid itself of excess workers.

"This is a very hard decision but I have to do it as part of the total rehabilitation of the government workforce," Mayor Ramon Talaga Jr. told City Hall workers, most of whom have temporary appointments.

A partial list of names of 118 terminated employees was posted in front of the City Hall building.

Talaga said the personnel services of the city government are now "over and above the limit."

The city has no savings to augment funds for personal services, he added.

To ease the effects of the retrenchment on the other employees, the casual workers will be put on rotation.

The first half will work during the third quarter of the year, while the other half will work in the last quarter, Talaga said.

City administrator Lenny Papa-Medua told employees in a meeting later that only 300 casual employees would be accommodated under this scheme.

Illegal loggers used storm for cover

BY CRISTINA ARZADON
PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

LAOAG CITY—A multi-agency task force was formed to investigate reports that illegal logging may have aggravated erosion on a mountain slope in an eastern town causing the uprooting of hundreds of trees when Typhoon "Feria" hit Ilocos Norte.

The agency's goal is to validate suspicions that illegally cut logs were mixed with uprooted trees when floods swept these down a mountainside in Sitio Nabasan in Nueva Era town and emptied these into the Bongo River.

The river straddles the towns of Banna, Marcos and Nueva Era.

Headed by the provincial board's committees on environment and laws, the team will work with the Department of Environment and Natural Resources, the Philippine National Police and the affected towns.

The team is scheduled to conduct an aerial survey of a mountain where the trees were supposedly uprooted to determine where they came from and whether landslides or erosion might have caused the trees to be swept away.

It will also try to recover the logs to be kept as government property and used later to repair damaged school buildings in the province.

The board appeared to be unimpressed with a DENR finding saying the trees that swamped the river were uprooted, contrary to the belief that some might have been previously cut.

Based on a July 16 report, Romeo Angay, DENR community development officer, described the trees, with an estimated volume of 100.6 cubic meters in Banna alone, as "uprooted."

Angay said they based their findings after an inspection of some 10.06 cubic meters of trees or 10 percent of the total number of trees that drifted along the river.

"We have yet to inspect the source of the trees due to inaccessible roads," Angay told the INQUIRER.

He said he and his men were only able to reach the Ilocos Norte-Abra Road leading to Sitio Nabasan or three kilometers from the supposed erosion site.

On Monday, the board called DENR officials and witnesses, including media representatives, to present what they actually saw when they surveyed the river.

Elpidio Fabian, provincial environment and natural resources officer, supported Angay's report that the trees might have been uprooted when rainwater seeped into the ground soil, causing either a landslide or erosion.

Other witnesses, however, said some trees came in the form of logs, indicating that the branches and roots were no longer attached to the trunk.

Fabian, after the board's intense grilling, later admitted that some trees might have been cut even before the typhoon struck.

"But that (assumption) is within the context that the trees were not found in the area where they were uprooted. Some appeared to have been previously cut because farmers have started cutting them into pieces," he said.

Sayyaf keeping hostages in 2 Basilan villages

LAMITAN, Basilan—Seven hostages of the Abu Sayyaf were sighted in Barangays Danit and Puntukan here over the weekend.

But Col. Pedro Cesar Ramboanga, chief of the 102nd Army Brigade, could not identify the hostages.

Bandit leader Abu Ahmad Salayyudin, alias Abu Sabaya, is still keeping 21 hostages in the villages.

Ramboanga said Sabaya was with his two sub-commanders, Suhod Tanajalin and Satar Yacob.

Maj. Charlie Galvez, 1st Scout Ranger Battalion commander, said Tanajalin was seriously wounded in a clash with government soldiers.

"He cannot walk because he was hit in the leg and in the left arm," he said.

Galvez said three bodies of suspected Abu Sayyaf bandits had been recovered.

Government soldiers also recovered a firearm after the clash.

Ramboanga said Sabaya's group split into three, "one engaging our Rangers in Danit and Puntukan, the other group was seen in Barangays Limbopas and Linungan and the third went up to Camanburingan in Tipo-tipo town."

Ramboanga said that based on intelligence reports, the seven hostages appeared to be "very weak."

Meanwhile, AFP Chief of Staff Gen. Diomedio Villanueva, who visited Basilan on Tuesday, welcomed the creation of a 150-member Barangay Volunteer Brigade in Barangay Tabuk in Isabela City, a known stronghold of the Abu Sayyaf.

Villanueva said the volunteer brigade is "tasked to report and monitor all movements of suspected members of the Abu Sayyaf in the barangay."

Gov. Wahab Akbar and provincial board member Jainal Adjibon initiated the creation of the barangay volunteer brigade.

"With the involvement of society, I do not think that there is any other way but for the endeavor of all those concerned to succeed. (We are) seeing to it that Basilan (will) be finally freed from the tyranny and cruelty of (the) Abu Sayyaf," Villanueva said.

Akbar and Adjibon said members of the civilian brigade were not associated with the Abu Sayyaf.

"So there are no traitors here," Adjibon said.

Akbar said civilian brigades would be organized in other barangays in this province.

In Zamboanga City, alert jail authorities were able to uncover an alleged plot of Abu Sayyaf leader Hector Janjalani to escape from his prison cell on Monday.

Senior Supt. Leopoldo Morante, Bureau of Jail Management and Penology chief for Western Mindanao, said guards who were conducting a routine inspection of the prison cells found cracks on the wall of the cell where Janjalani and 20 other suspected Abu Sayyaf members and supporters are being detained.

Hector is an elder brother of Abu Sayyaf chieftain Khadaffy Janjalani.

"They were trying to test the strength of the structure by way of hitting it with a hard object—the end part of a dumbbell," Morante said.

Morante said he had instructed city jail warden Chief Insp. Miguel Garchitorea to "check the cell of Hector Janjalani every 30 minutes" to prevent any escape. Julie Alipalini with reports from Jonathan Ma, PDI Mindanao Bureau

OVERLOADING, EXCESSIVE FEES Board stops ferry abuses

SANTA, Ilocos Sur—Following two accidents and complaints of overcharging of fare, the municipal council here on Wednesday passed two ordinances regulating ferry operations on the Abra River below the collapsed Quirino Bridge in Barangay Banaoang.

The two ordinances seek to regulate traffic rules and regulations along the village and the operations of barges and ferryboats. Their approval came as two boats capsized this week because of overloading.

On Tuesday, a boat carrying 11 students of the St. Paul College and the Divine Word College in Vigan City and two operators capsized 15 meters from the riverbank.

All the passengers were saved but some of their personal belongings were lost.

The following day, another boat carrying nine passengers and two operators sank. All of them were rescued.

The ordinance prescribes a maximum load of five people for small boats plying the route.

The barges, which usually ferry more than 100 passengers on peak operations, are allowed to carry 100 passengers.

The ordinance also lowers to P75 the P300 fee for light vehicles that are ferried across the river on barges.

Last week, the Ilocos Sur provincial board issued a memorandum that prescribed fare rates but these were not followed by ferry and boat operators.

Mayor Jesus Bueno Jr. said the Santa council decided to legislate and approve the ordinances because the memorandum issued by the provincial board "has no teeth."

Bridge was wiped out by floodwaters on July 4.

Earlier, Department of Public Works and Highways officials said it would take more than eight months to repair the collapsed portion of the bridge.

But Josefino Rigor, DPWH regional director, said that with a "state-of-the-art" bridge model and President Macapagal-Arroyo's approval, the damaged portion of the bridge could be repaired in about one month.

Rigor said they would put up the "Tulay ng Pangulo" on the collapsed portion of the bridge.

Rigor said the DPWH's bureau of design and construction inspected the Quirino Bridge last week and recommended the use of the "New Waagner Biro Modular Bridge" imported from Austria.

"The maximum (installation phase) would be 25 days," he told the INQUIRER.

The 73.4-meter middle span of the historic bridge collapsed on July 4 at the height of the typhoon. It is a major link to the northern towns of Ilocos Sur, including Vigan, and Ilocos Norte.

Rigor said the "Tulay ng Pangulo" would not need vertical support. He said the new span would be lifted from barges in the Abra River and connected to the undamaged spans. Leoncio Balbin Jr., PDI Northern Luzon Bureau posed gross income tax system as a priority measure.

Despite the lower taxes paid by fixed income earners and corporations, the Macapagal administration still expects revenues to go up, according to Tiglao.

He said the proposed tax reforms would eliminate corruption in the BIR and improve tax collection.

President Macapagal-Arroyo has announced that she wanted the BIR and the Bureau of Customs to become showcases of graft-free government agencies.

Tiglao said the President's tax reform program was central to her goal of good governance and economic stability.

5 benefits

In its recommendation, the Department of Finance cited five benefits of the proposed modified gross income tax system.

These include increasing tax collection, simplifying the tax structure and administration, minimizing the discretion of tax examiners, broadening the tax base and making the tax system more equitable.

The DOF said the government could post a "net gain" of P29.64 billion at a 26-percent tax rate for corporations, P6.36 billion at 21 percent and P1.73 billion at 20 percent.

"That's the good news for corporations and professionals. The bit of bad news is that there will be less discretion on the part (of tax examiners) and only very specific deductions (would be allowed.) The reason for this is that a lot of corruption in the BIR has been due to discretion in interpreting these deductions," Tiglao said.

Self-employed

He said the tax rate would similarly be lowered for self-employed individuals because this could result in a more efficient tax collection.

Tiglao said the tax brackets would be reduced from the current seven to four, with those earning P75,000 a year having to pay no taxes at all.

Under the proposal, those earning P75,000 to P149,999 a year would have to pay a tax representing 7 percent of their income; P150,000 to P349,999, 14 percent; P350,000 to P649,999, 21 percent and more than P650,000, 28 percent.

The present tax system has 5 percent for P1 to P9,999; 10 percent for P10,000 to P29,999; 15 percent for P30,000 to P69,999; 20 percent for P70,000 to P139,999; 25 percent for P140,000 to P249,999; 30 percent for P250,000 to P499,999; and 32 percent for more than P500,000.

Initial loss

But economist Romulo Neri said the BIR may suffer an initial loss of P50 billion.

In the next two years, the BIR's revenue collection may falter as it rids itself of corrupt officers who could be instrumental in the collection of state earnings, according to Neri, a professor at the Asian Institute of Management.

Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho said the higher tax collections under the proposed tax system would help fund the programs that the President outlined in her State of the Nation Address (Sona).

Camacho said non-tax earnings and creative borrowings would also finance the projects.

Six steps

In a speech before the Foreign Chamber of Commerce yesterday, Camacho said the finance department had identified six steps to help raise the money to finance the projects that the President had promised in the Sona.

The steps include collecting bigger revenues through the gross income tax system, increasing earnings from non-tax measures like the sale of government assets, prioritizing expenditures and reducing expenses for items like travel and representation.

The finance department will also encourage the private sector to participate in important infrastructure projects, tap the resources of state-run corporations and financial institutions, and resort to creative borrowings like securitization.

Economic manager

Like Camacho, Neri believes the President's commitments could be "realistically financed."

"The President is now acting like an economic manager and not an economist. She has gotten out of the clutches of the economic straitjacket and is now making targets rather than forecasts. And her promises are very sound and doable," Neri said.

Camacho said the foreign business community would be monitoring the progress of the Sona promises.

"Investor confidence will be bolstered only if we are consistent in these efforts," he said.

cerned heads of departments and agencies of their responsibility to meet their targets and deadlines as promised by the President.

Of the 35 promises, the Department of Transportation and Communications with five projects has the biggest number of promises to implement. (See table)

The Department of Education, Culture and Sports has been committed to deliver on Ms Macapagal's promise to build a schoolbuilding in every barangay, textbooks for Grades 1 to 4 students and textbooks for all first and second year high school students.

Like student's report card

The Housing Urban Development Coordinating Council under Michael T. Defensor, has been tasked to accomplish the following: cut housing permit signatures to only 45, award lots to 150,000 urban families per year and build 50,000 houses for the urban poor—all by the year 2002.

He also said the oversight committee would publish a report on the progress of these promises two weeks before Ms Macapagal's next Sona.

Salceda said the report would be "like a student's report card on each of the 35 commitments, accompanied by bureaucratic excuses or, hopefully, self-promotion."

Salceda said that while Ms Macapagal's Sona was "reasonably specific, double and time-bounded," she "simply cannot dismiss... the overall sense of creeping pessimism over the economy."

Aides and relatives said disappointment and anger had affected Wahid's fragile health.

Former Cabinet Minister Mohammad Mahfud told reporters that Wahid would leave the country with his family and physicians on Thursday and would stay in the United States for about two weeks.

In his first interview since his ouster as Indonesia's President, Wahid predicted a return to military-backed authoritarian rule under his successor, Megawati Sukarnoputri.

He also said he had underestimated his opponents' determination to unseat him through an impeachment hearing.

"I was wrong in my estimates of the politicians' backbone," Wahid said in an interview Wednesday with Associated Press Television News.

During the interview, Wahid did not appear ill or fatigued.

But he confirmed that he would travel to the United States for medical treatment, saying he had irregular blood pressure.

The national assembly dismissed Wahid on Monday. He has refused to leave the white-column mansion, protesting that his removal from office was unconstitutional and that he was still the legal head of state of the world's fourth most populous nation.

But on Wednesday his doctors convinced him to pack his bags.

The trip will give Wahid a face-saving exit after Monday's humiliation when the assembly replaced him in a unanimous vote with Megawati, the daughter of Indonesia's founding President, Sukarno.

As Wahid prepared for his departure, Megawati prayed and gave thanks at the grave of her father in Blitar, a town in East Java.

Wahid, 61, tried to block Monday's impeachment ballot by declaring emergency rule. But that failed when the military refused to obey his order to suspend the legislature.

Wahid is nearly blind and has had two strokes in recent years. He suffers from high blood pressure and diabetes and cannot walk unaided.

His brother and personal physician, Umar Wahid, said the former President would undergo a physical examination at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, Maryland.

"We have done intensive checks on his health over the last few days because of the physical, mental and emotional burdens he has been under," Umar said.

Before and during his 21-month presidency, Wahid was treated several times at Johns Hopkins Hospital and at the John A. Moran Eye Center at the University of Utah.

'The old ways'

Wahid said that his political foes would live to regret the decision to depose him.

He said his opponents in the legislature and the armed forces wanted to return to the ways of former dictator Suharto, who ruled with an iron grip for 32 years and was ousted in 1998 amid pro-democracy protests and riots.

"They used the quarrel between the politicians to set up their own rule, which I think will slide little by little to the old ways," Wahid said of the military commanders who were in a state of near-mutiny in the final months of his administration.

"People will react to the return of censorship, to the return of many, many restrictions in their lives," he said.

Angered by Wahid's tentative efforts at reforming the corruption-ridden armed forces, hard-line generals shifted their support to Megawati over the past year.

But Wahid did not condemn the military as a whole, adding that only a few generals supported a return to authoritarianism.

"In the Army, there are many good people as well," he said. "It's just a handful of people, those hard-liners."

Wahid also said he would have nothing to do with the new administration.

"I will not issue any advice to Megawati. The ouster is illegal and I will have nothing to do with it," he said.

Wahid said his long friendship with Megawati was over.

"She doesn't put the interests of the nation and the country" above her own, he said.

The two were close political allies in their resistance to Suharto's rule, and Wahid's backing enabled Megawati to become Vice President in 1999.

Emha said that after Wahid vacates the palace on Thursday, he would meet his supporters at the National Monument in an adjacent park and then leave for the airport.

But before he goes, Wahid wants authorities to issue him an official eviction notice.

"He's not leaving voluntarily. He still regards himself as President," Emha said.

When Wahid returns to Indonesia he will set up a pro-democracy think tank to be called the Free Human Foundation, Emha said.

Megawati's Cabinet

The national assembly was preparing on Wednesday to elect a new vice president.

The choice will help determine the shape of Megawati's Cabinet, which is to be announced within a few days.

Among the candidates for the powerful deputy's job are Akbar Tandjung, the head of the Golkar Party, which operated for three decades as Suharto's political machine.

Other vice presidential candidates include Hamzah Haz, the leader of the Muslim-based United Development Party, as well as Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono and Agum Gumelar, each of whom are former Wahid ministers and retired Army generals.

Hours before the vote was scheduled to take place, about 1,500 banner-waving demonstrators rallied outside the legislature in protest.

"We reject all of them because they destroyed our country," said Farid Rizqon, a 32-year-old accountant.

The Golkar Party was widely viewed as the most corrupt institution in Suharto's regime. Indonesia's Supreme Court is currently considering a motion to dissolve the party for campaign financing abuses.

The protesters claimed that Tandjung's election would signal an end to Indonesia's attempts to build democracy and curb corruption.

The military engaged in brutal repression during Suharto's dictatorship, killing and imprisoning thousands of his political opponents.

During Wahid's presidency, it was also accused of numerous human rights abuses in the troubled regions of Aceh, Maluku and Irian Jaya.

It was not immediately clear whether Megawati would attend the assembly's afternoon session.

Megawati's Indonesian Democratic Party of Struggle has not fielded a vice-presidential candidate, and has said that she wanted an all-party Cabinet. Reports from AP, AFP

BAGUIO CITY—President Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday said Indonesian President Megawati Sukarnoputri's ascent to power could stabilize Asia and provide "light" in the Philippines' darkening trade prospects with the international community.

"To the extent that it would help to stabilize the region, then it would help the climate of the Philippines," she told reporters at the presidential mansion here.

The President toured Northern Luzon yesterday to monitor rehabilitation work in Baguio, the Ilocos region and the province of Pampanga, which was damaged by typhoon "Feria" last month.

Long criticized for pursuing the country's commitments to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), the President said she had started discussing the yet to be established safety nets for the agriculture industry, in a bid to maximize agricultural trade between the Philippines and Australia and the United States.

She said there were good signs that international financial institutions could return to Asia after the peaceful change in leadership in Indonesia.

Ms Macapagal was one of the first heads of state all over the world to congratulate the new Indonesian President. The Philippine Senate yesterday passed a resolution expressing support for Megawati and for Ms Macapagal's stand.

"Many of the investors in Wall Street and other financial capitals look at one region only. They don't differentiate one country from the other," the President said.

She said she expected this week a final report on how local governments intended to reconcile their development agenda with her commitment to expand agro-industry, which she announced Monday in her State of the Nation Address.

The President said officials had begun working on solutions to market access problems and formalizing a new trade policy for agriculture.

"We must start negotiations with other countries to enable the sale of our food products abroad," she said, adding:

"For example, in Australia, the US and Canada, our mangoes are well in demand, but only mangoes from Guimaras. Now, Guimaras was hit by a pest outbreak, and other regions that grow mangoes cannot trade in its place. This is a waste." The President said she intended to develop new trade protocols that would allow other regions in the Philippines to benefit from the same arrangements as Guimaras.

"We must start talks with Canada, and we must encourage the US to speed up its inspection of our regions' mango production," she said.

Ms Macapagal said much of the existing GATT safety nets were providing farmers real cushions against a pre-scheduled tariff reduction to zero by 2005.

She said these safety nets were "people-friendly" in that they considered wide-ranging opposition to multibillion-peso development projects.

"National Irrigation Authority (officials) confirmed yesterday that they allocated P6 million in facilities for the first time in history," the President said.

"They gave us their list, and I advised them that they must never build huge irrigation dams anymore. I want to focus on communal irrigation dams. The biggest dam we have here (in Benguet) is the San Roque multipurpose dam project, but that will be the last," she said, adding that this position was fundamental to the strengthening of Philippine agriculture against global trade.

veal (who accepted the money) as it was someone very, very close to me," Ms Macapagal said in an interview with GMA-7.

"Who is that person who is very close to me?" the President said in Filipino. "If that someone was very close to me, why did he or she have to go through Bing?"

Asked who Evangelista was, presidential spokesperson Tiglao said: "He's close to Ms Rodrigo but it's a personal relationship I can't comment on." He added that Evangelista was not a Palace official.

Rodrigo "was being blamed for sitting on the documents which is why the vetoed bill was not recalled," the President said she was told.

When Rodrigo last week accused First Gentleman Mike Arroyo of accepting money in exchange for promising that the veto would be rescinded, Ms Macapagal said the former secretary had resigned to take care of her child. At the time, the President made no mention of knowing that the resignation had anything to do with the vetoed clearinghouse franchise.

Bye, Mike

When Mike Arroyo left Tuesday night for a two-week vacation in the United States, he and his wife expressed the same wish that the press lay off the issue of the alleged bribe.

"Everything to be said has been said already. Just refer to previous radio interviews," Ms Macapagal told reporters at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport, where she was seeing her husband off on a 10 p.m. Philippine Airlines flight for San Francisco.

But opposition senators, who are set on launching a congressional inquiry, claim that the scandal is an indication of how bad the situation is under the Macapagal administration, and will not let the matter rest. The President continued to welcome the possible inquiry into Rodrigo's allegations, while defending Arroyo.

For his part, her sad, troubled-looking husband dismissed speculations that he was flying to America to dodge the upcoming Senate inquiry.

"I'll be back on the sixth (of August) to answer charges. Don't worry," he told a horde of reporters on his way to the airline tube. He later apologized to the press for not having enough time to answer their queries.

"I want to rest. My back aches every now and then," added the First Gentleman, who injured his back in a helicopter crash in Mountain Province in 1989. He was later confined to a hospital bed for a month.

Back, golf, cough

Tiglao also said that Arroyo was scheduled for medical checkup on a slipped disc. Arroyo has also said that he is tired and wants to visit relatives and play some golf. He has also said he would get medical attention for a cough.

Tiglao cleared the First Gentleman of any wrongdoing, adding that Arroyo was prepared to face the allegations.

"The First Gentleman will confront any accuser in a legitimate venue and again we would like to repeat the President's statement that the First Gentleman had not committed any instance of bribe (sic)," Tiglao said.

The issue, he said, was that the company reportedly owned by Dichaves wanted a franchise despite the opposition of the Department of Transportation and Communications.

"The President has not overridden her veto," Tiglao pointed out.

Opposition Sona

In an opposition version of the State of the Nation Address (Sona), Sen. Edgardo Angara said opposition legislators would keep a close eye on Arroyo.

"So much rhetoric has been made in the Sona. But talk is cheap. We are now watching—as the whole nation is—how the Mike Arroyo-Bing Rodrigo story unfolds," Angara said in his 17-page speech.

Earlier, Angara said senators would subpoena Arroyo to explain his side in an investigation.

After his speech, Angara told the INQUIRER that the scandal has "knocked down one of the four pillars of (President Macapagal-Arroyo's) government—morality." He enumerated the President's four pillars: free enterprise, social bias, agricultural modernization and morality.

"It rings hollow now," Angara said of the "morality pillar."

He said that Rodrigo, a "childhood friend" of the President, had no reason to "fabricate" the story.

If the President has given her Cabinet a deadline to improve its performance, she should also give herself a month to investigate her husband, Angara suggested.

"This nation really is riding in a paper banca. Unless this government spells out a clear direction, that banca can go nowhere but sink," he said.

One year of peace

Opposition congressmen, too, seemed determined to get to the bottom of the matter, although one, Makati Rep. Agapito Aquino, said he would give Ms Macapagal the breathing room she asked for in her Sona.

"One year of peace, that's what I am giving her," said Aquino as he refused to comment on the Arroyo scandal.

But Laban Rep. Constantino Jaraula (Cagayan de Oro) said he would file resolution seeking a formal investigation into Rodrigo's allegations.

"This is a serious matter that we should not ignore because in our effort to help the administration of President Macapagal-Arroyo, the administration itself must be able to show credibility," Jaraula said.

Another opposition solon, Cavite Rep. Gilbert Remulla, said he would co-author Jaraula's resolution.

Jaraula and Remulla said that while the President vowed to eradicate corruption in government, she skirted the issue involving her husband.

"We were wondering why she did not make any reference to any private individual who may be tied up with higher officials and who may have committed corruption," Jaraula said.

He said a formal investigation would "set the record straight and give all parties in the controversy the opportunity to clarify the issue."

For his part, Ombudsman Aniano Desierto said his office "will not investigate him (Arroyo) because he is not a public official."

Desierto added, however, that "if there is a formal complaint, we will investigate... but to initiate it on the basis alone of a report against a private citizen is difficult."

He added that his office would wait for the results of a Senate investigation before making its own move.

Background

Evangelista told the President that Rodrigo was dragged into the controversy after the secretary accompanied a friend to Presidential Legislative Liaison Office chief Gabriel Claudio to determine the status of the request to recall the veto.

Rodrigo, in an earlier interview, said she had once accompanied a woman named Malou Nufiez to Claudio's office to follow up on the request.

Ms Macapagal vetoed the bill, which was filed on July 24 last year, because it would impose an additional burden on the country's telecom firms, which would have to pay a toll to interconnect through the clearinghouse.

Rodrigo accused Arroyo and three others, whom she did not name, of receiving money in exchange for promising to get the veto rescinded, and of using her as a scapegoat when the deal fell through.

Earlier reports, based only on text messages, said that the amount involved was P50 million. Rodrigo herself has not specified a figure, except to imply that it was a large amount of money.

Rodrigo, an elementary and high school classmate of the President's, said she resigned from her post after learning that Arroyo accused an unnamed ex-Palace secretary of receiving bribe money in a July 17 radio interview.

Paper boats...

in her State of the Nation Address (Sona) Monday has kicked up a storm, with opposition leaders and other critics accusing her of lying.

Ms Macapagal began her speech on Monday by recounting how three children living at the Payatas dump had written her letters containing their wish lists, which they then folded into paper boats in hopes they would reach Malacañang.

Senate Minority Floor Leader Edgardo Angara hit out at the "parable of the paper boat," telling reporters "it is not credible. Even (if used) as a figure of speech, it should at least have a ring of truth."

Even INQUIRER columnist Neal Cruz thundered in his column yesterday: "That story is a tall tale... A paper boat can stay afloat no more than five minutes. It immediately soaks up water and sinks."

Apparently, neither had read an article by INQUIRER reporter Christian Esguerra published on July 9, headlined "Payatas children send out ships of hope to President." A photo of the launching also appeared on the July 9 front page of the Manila Standard.

The INQUIRER reported that three children—Jayson Vann Banagan, 10, Erwin Dolera, 8, and Jomar Pabalan, 10—were among several children who wrote letters to the President, folded them into boats. These were launched down the Pasig at the Aciete Extension in Sta. Mesa, Manila, some 400 meters upriver from Malacañang.

All the children had lost relatives when a mountain of garbage collapsed and killed more than 300 people in July last year.

The three boys interviewed by the INQUIRER were the same three whom Ms Macapagal presented when she delivered her Sona before Congress to personalize the plight of the poor.

On Monday night, Ms Macapagal clarified that she did not actually see the paper boats.

"They really wrote the letter and it's true that they made a paper boat. They floated it on the Pasig in hopes it would reach Malacañang. But it did not reach us. I just read about it in the papers," she told local television.

The Kalipunan ng Damayang Mahihirap (Kadamay), the group that organized the letter-writing event on July 8, the anniversary of the Payatas tragedy, did so hoping that the children's wish lists would "touch the heart" of the President.

The group got 23 Payatas children to write the letters and float them down the Pasig in a "symbolic" gesture, said Oliver Ortega of Kadamay.

Missing the point

Ortega said those who insisted that the boats could not have reached the President had missed the point.

"Of course, it's impossible. But the point is, the President got the message through the newspapers," he said. Only the INQUIRER published the story.

Instead of arguing about whether the paper boats could have reached the Palace, opposition senators should give the government a chance to fulfill its promises, Ortega said.

"Our fingers are crossed because we don't want the children to be another Mang Pandoy," he added, referring to a squatter who was used as a symbol of the poor under the Ramos administration. Mang Pandoy, despite several opportunities offered by the government, is as poor today as ever.

"We're hoping that the children's lives will be better, and more importantly, the life of every Filipino," Ortega said.

Presidential spokesperson Rigoberto Tiglao said yesterday that Ms Macapagal had used the story in a figurative sense.

She "seized on that symbolism because the government also believes that the country's future rests on the youth," Tiglao told Radio Mindanao Network.

Esguerra, 22, the reporter who wrote the July 9 article, said he was surprised to see the President present the three boys he had interviewed during her nationally televised Sona.

"I didn't think the message would reach her," he said. "I thought that if it did, she would ignore it."

Which just proves, if nothing else, that the President at least reads the papers. With reports from Christian Esguerra, AFP

Group, said Armando Avila alias Tata, alleged leader of the Nonoy Avila gang, was seized Tuesday evening in Barangay Kararayan, Naga City.

It was the apprehension of Avila's getaway driver Nito Libradilla alias Toto last Sunday in Bagong Silang, Kalookan City, that reportedly led to the gang leader's arrest.

Gualberto said the gang was behind the 1998 abduction of the owners of the Goodah Food House chain in Quezon City and of the Goodies Mami House in Valenzuela City.

He declined to identify the victims, saying they had requested not to be named and also refused the PNP's invitation for them to confront Avila and Libradilla.

In Cebu City, 11-year-old Ryan James Yu was released yesterday by his abductors. He was the latest victim of kidnapping-for-ransom gangs preying mostly on wealthy Chinese-Filipino families. (See story on Page A10.)

A PNP source said that the owner of the Goodah Food House chain was able to escape his kidnappers, and that no ransom was paid. But the owner of the Goodies Mami House was released supposedly only after his family paid a P2-million ransom.

"These two kidnappings were kept secret during the previous administration," the source said without elaborating.

Avila and Libradilla were presented by the CIDG to PNP Director General Leandro Mendoza and Interior Secretary Jose Lina in Camp Crame.

The two men are said to be ex-members of the Cavite-based Mike Brillantes gang, which is engaged in kidnapping, murder, car theft and other crimes in that province as well as in Laguna and other Southern Tagalog provinces.

Gualberto said their arrests were covered by warrants for crimes imputed to them during their stint in the Mike Brillantes gang.

'Make no mistake'

Mendoza said the 90-day deadline was issued to the PNP during the July 12 meeting of the National Peace and Order Council.

This means that the PNP has until Oct. 12 to fulfill this mission, but Lina said the President had extended the deadline up to the end of the year.

"Make no mistake. The crack-down against lawless elements of our society, especially kidnap-for-ransom groups, will further intensify," Lina said.

Mendoza said the crime wave could be part of the supposed continuing efforts to destabilize the Macapagal administration.

"This is one matter being looked into," he said. "As you know, crime is always related to politics."

But he added that the PNP had no concrete evidence yet to link crime activities to parties seeking to unsettle the administration.

Justice Secretary Hernando Perez, who spoke at the opening ceremonies of the seminar being attended by anti-crime units of both the PNP and the Armed Forces, said the administration was bent on neutralizing kidnapping gangs.

"We intend to crush kidnappers not by violating human rights but by good police work," he said.

Perez chairs the newly formed National Anti-Crime Commission (NACC)—the government's response to the rising crime rates.

Referring to the practice of forcibly extracting confessions from crime suspects, Perez said it was time to focus on real investigative work to resolve cases.

"The days of beating up suspects to make them confess to crimes they did not commit are over. That is not the way it should be done," he said in Taglish.

He recalled that in the past, he decided to defend certain persons simply because they were tortured into admitting to crimes.

"We will respect human rights. Whoever is being charged should be charged because there is evidence," he said.

In an interview, Perez said no standard operating procedure was governing authorities confronted with cases of kidnapping.

14 in Metro

At the formal opening yesterday of a seven-day seminar in Camp Crame on the investigation of kidnapping and other heinous crimes, Managuelod said the number of abduction cases in Metro Manila rose to 14 in the first half of the year.

In contrast, he said, there were only three such cases recorded during the same period last year. He did not cite any reason for the upsurge.

The Associated Press quoted Managuelod as saying: "We are not satisfied with our performance. The government is not, and nobody is."

"We must now send the message that kidnappers cannot survive the ferocity of our war against them."

Perez told the INQUIRER that the NACC was scheduled to meet for the first time yesterday, to come up with its own implementing rules and guidelines.

These will be submitted to the President for approval, he said.

The members of the NACC are: three representatives of the private sector; the defense and interior secretaries; the national security adviser; the chiefs of the PNP and AFP; the director of the National Bureau of Investigation; and the chief state prosecutor of the Department of Justice.

In the Japanese study, Osaka City University Medical School researchers used blood pressure tests and an imaging technique called echocardiography to examine the effect on the heart arteries' ability to dilate. Measurements were taken before and after exposure to secondhand smoke.

Tobacco smoke appeared to impair the functioning of the endothelium, a lining of cells in the arteries that helps regulate dilation.

Scientists believe that coronary artery disease may begin when the endothelium is damaged, leaving the arteries prone to blockages or narrowing.

"This change may be one reason why passive smoking is a risk factor for cardiac disease" and related deaths in nonsmokers, the researchers said.

Reversible

The study did not examine whether the changes from the one-time exposure to smoke were permanent.

But previous research among smokers had found similar changes that may be reversible if smokers quit, said Dr. David Paxon, president of the American Heart Association.

If exposure continues, "gradually, as hardening of the arteries sets in, it's irreversible," he said.

The study "really sort of confirms prior information that we've had about the adverse effects of secondhand smoke," Faxon said.

Stanton Glantz, a professor of medicine at the University of California at San Francisco, said the findings add fuel to the debate over secondhand smoke.

"The findings of the study... add to the evidence suggesting that everyone should be protected from even short-term exposure to the toxins in secondhand smoke," wrote Glantz and colleague William Parmley.

"Communities should continue to require that workplaces, including restaurants and bars, be smoke-free and should mount public education campaigns to encourage smoke-free homes. Not only will everyone breathe better, but they will also have healthier hearts,"

THE DAILY GOSPEL

Thursday, July 26, 2001
Joachim and Anne

Ex 19:1-2, 9-11, 16-20
Mt 13:16-17

1st Reading:
Gospel:

Jesus said to his disciples, "Blessed are your eyes because they see, and your ears, because they hear."

For I tell you that many prophets and upright people would have longed to see the things you see, but they did not, and to hear the things you hear, but they did not hear it."

Commentary

Early Christianity presented itself as a school of wisdom and a new philosophy. In all the gospels Jesus is the master who introduces his disciples into a higher wisdom and who reveals to them the secrets of the kingdom. This special gift brings with it a very high responsibility. For their turn they have to make disciples of all the nations and teach them to obey everything that Jesus commanded them. They have to function as the salt of the earth and the light of the world. They have to guide humankind to a new knowledge of God, a wisdom that has the power to bring about a new relation with God and a new world.

Father in heaven, you have chosen us to share in the wisdom of Jesus your Son. Grant us faith, that we may follow Him in all the circumstances of life.

SUPREME COURT DOCTRINES

REMEDIAL LAW (EVIDENCE/CRIMINAL PROCEDURE)—Unexplained flight as evidence of guilt of accused—The act, declaration or omission of a party as to a relevant fact may be given in evidence against him. One type of act that can be given in evidence against the accused is flight. In criminal law, flight means an act of evading the course of justice by voluntarily withdrawing oneself to avoid arrest or detention or the institution or continuance of criminal proceedings. The unexplained flight of the accused person may, as a general rule, be taken as evidence having tendency to establish his guilt. In fact, we have held that once an accused escapes from prison or confinement or jumps bail or flees to a foreign country, he loses his standing in the court, and unless he surrenders or submits himself to its jurisdiction, he is deemed to have waived any right to seek relief from the court. Armstrong keeps Tour lead LAVAU, France—Lance Armstrong's convincing lead in the Tour de France was untouched here Tuesday after a long but easy 15th stage eventually won by Belgian sprint ace Rik Verbrugghe. The 29-year-old US Postal team leader maintains his 5min 05sec advantage over his main rival Jan Ullrich of the Telekom team as the race begins to make its way back up towards Paris after a week of hard climbing. Armstrong, Germany's Ullrich and Andrei Kivilev of Kazakhstan—in third overall—were in the main peloton that came in 15:07 adrift of Verbrugghe and a group of 25 riders, signaling the lack of urgency after Monday's rest day.

IOC joins Fiba in BAP row

THE INTERNATIONAL Olympic Committee has now joined the for a lasting solution to the long-running Basketball Association of the Philippines imbroglio.

This surfaced as the IOC and the International Basketball Federation agreed to closely monitor the conciliatory efforts of feuding parties Gonzalo Puyat II and Quinteliano Lital.

In a letter sent to the Philippine Olympic Committee dated July 24, Fiba secretary general Borislav Stankovic has ordered Puyat and Lital to amicably settle the rift until Aug. 31 in order to lift the suspension.

Otherwise, Stankovic said the IOC and the Fiba will send emissaries to the country on Sept. 1 to sit down with both groups and decide whom to recognize.

Stankovic said IOC officials met and discussed the situation with his group at the recent IOC session in Moscow where Belgian surgeon Jacques Rogge was elected IOC president.

Also, Stankovic gave Puyat and Lital seven days to sign an agreement for the Fiba to allow the POC to submit a provisional lineup and beat the SEA Games Aug. 10 deadline.

POC president Celso Dayrit said once both parties fail to come to terms within that period, "we are staring at the non-inclusion of a basketball team in the SEA Games."

DANNY Seigle's scoring splurge in the final half powered San Miguel Beer to an 81-71 victory over Mobiline last night as the Beermen earned a semifinals stint in the PBA Commissioners Cup at the PhilSports Arena.

Steady from the field, the 6-foot-7 Seigle fired 18 of his game-high 24 points in the home stretch and had seven rebounds and three assists.

Alaska arranged a best-of-five semifinals showdown with San Miguel Beer after scoring a 78-68 win over Sta. Lucia Realty in the second game.

The Beermen are the favorites in the next round, judging from the way reinforcement Nate Johnson made his teammates play.

Johnson finished with 23 points and set up shooters Seigle, Olsen Racela and Dwight Lago for the more important baskets.

Lago and Racela contributed a triple each late in the fourth, while Seigle had two of his own that doused the Phone Pals' several tries at coming back in the payoff period.

The Phone Pals threatened, 61-68, on Todd Bernard's triple but Seigle, off a nifty pass from Racela, retaliated with a trey that signalled the end of the one-sided encounter.

More swim marks broken

FUKUOKA, Japan—Ian Thorpe added another chapter to his burgeoning legend here Tuesday when he shattered his 800m freestyle world record, sharing the night with American Michael Phelps who smashed his 200m butterfly mark. The Australian's time to win the world championship title was all the more remarkable in that he did it just 30 minutes after swimming a competitive 200m freestyle semifinal. And it wasn't just shaving the record. He obliterated it, touching in 7:39.16 to beat the time he set earlier this year of 7:41.59. Grant Hackett led the race for 700 meters until Thorpe turned on his famous last lap sprint. The 1,500m specialist clocked 7:40.34, the second fastest time ever and under Thorpe's old world record time. Thorpe also broke the 200-meter freestyle world record later in the day with a time of 1 minute and 44.06 seconds.

Korean trader found dead

A SOUTH Korean businessman was found dead in the kitchen of his condominium unit in Pasig City on Tuesday. Supt. John Sosiso, Pasig City police chief, however, dismissed foul play in the death of Kim Young Yin, 55, director of Key Communications Philippines. Sosiso reported there were no external injuries on Kim's body while his personal belongings were found intact. Insp. Antonio Paulite II, case investigator, also said there were no indications of struggle or forced entry into the victim's apartment.

METRO

LOUIE C. CAMINO, Editor

Lacson, chief of liars

SEN. Panfilo Lacson, breaking his long silence on my allegations about him, said in a letter to the Inquirer that he has "never stolen anything from anybody, living or dead."

Had Lacson made that in a face-to-face interview with a reporter, he would have said it with a straight face.

The guy can lie through his teeth and still keep a poker face.

When he was still with the dreaded Metrocom Intelligence and Security Group (MISG) in the 1970s, I once ribbed him about the stories he and his men would make up in order to show that captured crime suspects were killed in shootouts.

As a police reporter covering the MISG, I knew that the suspects were killed while their hands were tied or raised in surrender. Although I didn't see the actual execution, I was told by some of Lacson's subordinates who took part in the "salvaging" (summary executions) how the crime suspects met their end.

Lacson looked at me straight in the eye and without blinking said, "Mon, hindi kami gumagawa niyan dito (We don't do that here)." He meant that his men did not execute criminals.

ON TARGET

Ramon Tulfo

In the aftermath of the Kuratong Baleleng rubout case, I saw Ping Lacson, who was then chief of Task Force Habagat of the defunct Presidential Anti-Crime Commission (PACC), and exchanged a banter with him.

I told Lacson: "Ping, hindi maganda ang pagkakasalvage n'yo sa mga kidnapper at holdupper na yun (You botched the execution of those kidnappers and holdup men)."

My jest was not ignored. Lacson replied: "Mon, hindi namin sinalvage ang mga yun. Napatay sila sa shootout." Again, he said it without batting an eyelash.

In a three-page letter to the Inquirer—which, I understand, was written by former Inquirer reporter and People's Journal publisher Raymond Burgos—Lacson dismissed as "lies, falsehoods" and inaccuracies" charges that:

● He ordered the killing of Reginald Hill, a MISG detainee, in the late 1970s. Hill's wife is now Mrs. Alice Lacson.

● He robbed a dead kidnapper of a very expensive watch.

● The kidnapper, a foreign Chinese, was executed by Lacson's men.

Magbago ka na, Ping, dahil senador ka na. Huwag ka nang magsinungaling dahil baka ka tamaan ng kidlat!

"I am not the demon that Mr. Tulfo and his financiers want so much to maliciously and viciously portray," Lacson said.

What financier or financiers are you talking about, Honorable Senator? Nobody is paying me to expose you and your evil ways.

You are the demon personified, Mr. Senator, because only the demon could have committed the following:

● Order the killing of the boy-friend of a ramp model in 1975 because you wanted her for yourself.

● Order the killing of the boy-friend of a coed at Far Eastern University (FEU) to please the girl's parents. The girl's parents, who were your friends, didn't like their daughter's relationship to the boy.

relationship to the boy.

● Order the killing of a 19-year-old girl and her sister, 7 years old, because they witnessed the execution of a crime suspect. The suspect happened to be the 19-year-old girl's boyfriend.

● Kick out of a helicopter flying over the Manila Bay two women whose only crime was that they were relatives of a notorious kidnapper.

Mr. Senator, you have remained silent on those charges which were based on the confession of former MISG civilian agent Francisco "Kit" Mateo, who carried out your orders. Mateo made the confession because he was dying of cancer.

You said that you met Alice, who was then Alice de Perio-Hill, on a blind date arranged by a friend.

But Mateo said you introduced yourself to Alice while she was visiting her husband at the MISG detention cell. You followed Alice when she got out of the MISG building. After that, you had an affair with her while her husband was in detention.

No, Mr. Lacson, Alice was not separated from her husband when you had an illicit relationship with her. You and Alice made a cuckold out of Reginald Hill.

A few months after Hill was released from detention, he was run over by a truck. I understand the truck even belonged to then Col. Rolando Abadilla, your boss at the MISG.

You said that I made the exposés in a two-part open letter to you in this space after you said I was in the payroll of then PNP chief Roberto Lastimoso.

You said that you scrapped my alleged P250,000 payola from Lastimoso when you became the PNP chief and that apparently I resented it.

When you were PNP chief I was praising you to high heavens because I thought you had integrity. So, if it were true that I resented your scrapping my supposed payola, how come I always praised you in this space while you were still PNP chief?

The truth is I changed my attitude toward you when I learned that you masterminded the abduction and murder of publicist Salvador "Bubby" Dacer and his driver, Emmanuel Corbito, and casino employee Edgar Benitain.

This was after you were already out of the Philippine National Police.

Only recently, I learned about the other atrocities you committed when you were still in the service.

'Callboy' singled out in Hayashi slay

BY CHRISTIAN V. ESQUERRA

A DASHING young man described as a "professional opportunist" killed renowned Japanese harpist Tadao Hayashi, police said yesterday.

Investigators are withholding the name of the suspect pending the arrest.

A man who identified himself as the one who had killed Hayashi, phoned police yesterday and said he would turn himself in.

He was supposed to surrender to Reynaldo Malonzo, Caloocan City officer in charge, but failed to show up at press time.

Chief Supt. Nestorio Gualberto, head of the Philippine National Police-Criminal Investigation and Detection Group, said the suspect may be hiding in Mindoro.

Gualberto said he has already sent a CIDG team to the island province to flush out the suspect.

Short of calling the suspect a "callboy," Supt. Dionicio Borromeo, Caloocan Station Investigation and Intelligence Division chief, said the man makes a living by luring male homosexuals into living with him and giving him money.

Hayashi, 62, met the suspect through a mutual friend some time ago, Borromeo said.

Since then, the man, aged 21 to 23, regularly visited Hayashi at his two-bedroom bungalow in Caloocan, Borromeo said.

He said the suspect would usually come in the morning, leave after a few hours, and return at night to sleep with Hayashi.

A witness told police that the suspect dropped by the victim's house every day.

Borromeo said the suspect could have killed Hayashi over the weekend when the harpist failed to give in to his request.

"The suspect didn't mean to kill Hayashi," Borromeo told the Inquirer. "They had an argument and that triggered the brutal killing. The attack came unexpectedly."

He claimed the suspect has a tendency to get "violent" whenever his gay lovers failed to give in to his whims.

Investigators had dropped the possibility that Hayashi, a resident of Manila since 1985, was killed during a robbery.

Supt. Benjardi Mantele, Caloocan police chief, had said the Japanese even entertained the suspect, as shown by the two glasses found on a table in the victim's living room.

Mantele said Hayashi was killed between Sunday and Monday morning, Antonio Clet, Tadao's office assistant, found the body.

Police said the suspect was so strong he managed to grab Hayashi by the hair and slam his head and face on the floor, wall and cabinet.

Jealous man kills wife

JEALOUS husband Joselito Caneja, 42, on Tuesday allegedly beat to death his wife, Florentina, 40, whom he suspected of having an affair with another man, police said yesterday. Caneja is now facing parricide charges before the city prosecutor's office. Police said that Caneja beat up his wife about 11 a.m. on Tuesday inside their house on Bezzotte Street, Karuhatan in Valenzuela City. Florentina's brother, police said, rushed her to the Valenzuela General Hospital when she began to vomit blood. But Florentina died on her way there, police said.

Teenager shot dead after winning basketball game; teammate critical

BY JEROME ANING

AFTER winning a basketball game, a teenager was killed while his teammate was seriously wounded after they were attacked and shot by the losing group in Quiapo before dawn yesterday.

The shooting took place while victims Ric Fuentes and Romeo dela Cruz, resident of 828 R. Hidalgo St., and two other friends were resting on the sidewalk at the corner of Hidalgo and Elizondo Street around 4:30 a.m.

Fuentes, who was shot in the head, died on the spot.

Dela Cruz, who also suffered a head wound, is in critical condition at the Philippine General Hospital.

The four had just finished playing a long basketball game, according to investigator PO3 Rodolfo Lingcong of the city police's homicide section. The victims' team emerged victorious but the other group was left grumbling in defeat.

While the four were resting, four young men, one of them armed with a handgun, sneaked behind the winners.

The gunman fired several shots, hitting Fuentes and Dela Cruz. He then fled the scene with his companions.

Investigators retrieved from the scene a

.9mm-caliber spent shell and a live .9mm-caliber bullet. The suspects, whose descriptions were given to the police by the surviving players, are now being sought by the police.

Mangaldan meet

THERE will be a general meeting and reunion of Mangaldan residents in Metro Manila at the Max Restaurant on Quezon Avenue starting at 6 30 p.m. today. For details, call up Mike Evangelista, 364-9145 and Julie Abalos, 931-6363.

of the mall is prohibited.

Police said the victim tried to explain that they could not just be shooed away because they were seated on the sidewalk, which technically is not a mall property. Arias added that they were only resting and would soon be on their way.

The watchmen, however, reportedly got irked. After Arias refused to budge, he approached the victim and fired his 12-gauge shotgun point-blank at the abdomen of the law student.

Cac and Adrao fled the scene and ran all the way to their boarding house on M.V. delos Santos where they narrated what happened to their landlady, Mildred Retella, who promptly alerted the police.

Operatives of the Plaza Miranda police community precinct headed by Chief, Insp. Ferdinand Quirante arrived at the scene and found Opeña and the head of the mall's night-shift security, Aniceto Fabia, near Arias' body.

Quirante said they caught Fabia placing a fan knife near the victim's hand, in an apparent attempt to plant evidence. Sumbello's shotgun was found in the possession of Opeña, but he said the suspect gave it to him before fleeing.

Fabia, 27, and Opeña were both detained and brought to the homicide section. Investigators were considering filing charges of obstruction of justice against them.

Nun accused of injustice refuses to talk to media

BY PHILIP C. TUBEZA

A NUN belonging to a progressive Catholic religious order known for espousing social justice causes was accused of illegally dismissing two faculty members of St. Bridget School in Quezon City.

Educators Rolly Casuga and Jean Chavez said Sr. Mary Tarcila Abano, of the Religious for the Good Shepherd (RGS), fired them from the school faculty "without solid basis and without respect for due process."

The two were fired for allegedly not submitting Professional Regulatory Commission documents showing they had taken concrete steps to secure their licenses as professional teachers.

Abano gave them up to July 15 to submit the documents. But two days before the deadline, the nun signed their walking papers.

"We submitted our PRC documents on July 14, exactly the day before the deadline," Casuga said. "It was our principal who violated her own self-imposed deadline because she issued the termination orders before the prescribed deadline had even lapsed."

"On procedural due process alone, this is already one blatant violation," he added.

Chavez worked at St. Bridget for 13 years while Casuga stayed there for eight years. They said they are permanent employees and, under the Labor Code, can only be dismissed if there is just cause.

While the complainants admitted they did not immediately follow up their PRC papers, the two stressed that they were able to follow Abano's order.

"We admit we procrastinated a bit as we are victims of our 'Pilipino time' culture," Chavez said. "But why penalize and prejudice us beforehand, that we will not work for our license when we still have time."

"Sister Tarcila herself acknowledged the fact that the exams necessary to secure the license are scheduled in August," she added.

The two said they are disappointed at the treatment they got from Abano, noting that her religious order is a known "advocate of social justice."

Sr. Christine Tan, who blew the whistle on the Estrada family for cornering the charity fund of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office, and Sr. Sol Perpiñan, founder of the Ibon Facts and Figures and the Third World Movement Against the Exploitation of Women, both belong to the RGS.

The Inquirer went to St. Bridget last week and tried to get Abano's side, but she was said to be attending a meeting at another school.

On Tuesday, the Inquirer again went to the school but was barred from entering the gate.

When this reporter tried to explain that the Inquirer needed to get Abano's side, the guard apologized and explained that he was under strict orders not to let the press in.

Three generations

MARLON Brando has made himself scarce on the movie screen for some years now, so we're delighted to learn that he's finished shooting a new film, "The Score," directed by former Muppeteer Frank Oz.

To make the movie even more of an event, it also stars Robert De Niro and Edward Norton. This is great, because a case can be made for the view that Brando, De Niro and Norton are the best actors in their respective generations of screen thespians.

So, "The Score" is a must for movie buffs because it showcases the performances of the top exponents of three generations of the craft of film acting.

People who view the film will be given the rare opportunity of comparing the acting styles of the legendary Brando, the middle-aged De Niro and the relatively young Norton.

VIEWFINDER

Nestor U. Torre

Interestingly, all three actors had their start in very intense roles—Brando in "A Streetcar Named Desire," De Niro "Taxi Driver," and Norton in "Primal Fear."

In fact, it would be a fascinatingly instructive acting exercise to get De Niro and Norton to do their own takes on Brando's

"signature" character in "Streetcar . . ." Stanley Kowalski, to see how they would try to match Brando's "animalistic" portrayal.

But that's in the realm of fantasy. What's real is the three actors' first-ever thespic collaboration on "The Score," with Oz being given the enormously challenging honor of dealing with their volatile temperaments and creatively using them to come up with what will hopefully turn out to be an exceptional film.

"The Score" is a thriller about the theft of a priceless scepter by three competent but combative thieves. Brando plays it old-school and courtly, De Niro's character is cool and laid-back, while Norton is antsy and unpredictable. Needless to say, while they're all after the same prize, they don't exactly get along like three puppies in a basket.

Let's hope that Frank Oz is up to the task of reining in and orchestrating his three lead actors' legendary thespic energies.

Pop violinist—and vocalist
FROM the world of music comes news that pop violinist Vanessa Mae has released her latest album, "subject to change." Co-written by Vanessa Mae with record producer Youth, the pieces in the album present her for the first time as a full-fledged vocalist.

Vanessa Mae started out as a typical classical violin prodigy. At only eight years of age, she was already wowing concert audiences. Between the ages of 11 and 13, she recorded three classical albums that were very well received.

But she wanted to reach out to mainstream music audiences, so in 1995 she released "Storm," her first pop album. Her new type of fusion music established her as an international star.

Her new album, "subject to change," consolidates Vanessa Mae's gains. In addition, her collaboration with some hot dance producers, including J51G and Airscape, aims to introduce her to an even younger audience.

'The Quest for Noah's Flood'

SEVERAL years ago, Dr. Robert Ballard used high-tech equipment to look for and find the wreck of the Titanic. This year, he has put his extraordinary ability to similarly eventful use, to search the Black Sea for the location of the flood in the Bible. The result of his efforts is the documentary special, "The Quest for Noah's Flood," to be screened on the National Geographic Channel at 9 p.m. this Sunday, July 29.

Why the Black Sea? A provocative book has proposed that the Black Sea was a freshwater lake that was transformed to a brackish sea by a cataclysmic flood in 5,500 BCE, around the time that some biblical scholars have established Noah's Great Flood to have taken place.

Using state-of-the-art robotic submersible technology, Ballard and his team found some ancient shipwrecks, including a perfectly preserved vessel dated between 410 and 520 CE.

Verni Varga sings of the good news

BY LEAH SALTERIO

GENUINE happiness can be found. Ask singer Verni Varga.

Verni says she was able to find true happiness with a lot of help from prayers. Today, she likes to tell her inspiring tale of how she settled down with the man God gave as the answer to her prayers.

Known as The Vamp and for being a big tease onstage when she's performing, Verni admits she used to be a woman of the world who enjoyed partying and going out with friends.

"It was never fulfilling," Verni allows. "That's why I looked for a deeper kind of satisfaction."

Even her relationships were temporary. When she was 23, she bore a kid out of wedlock, which, however, she doesn't regret.

"I asked God to give me the right man. My prayers were answered."

Verni recalls that they started on the right note on the day she went out on a date with businessman Ric Oledan, who would become her husband.

First date

"My prayer was that if I'd meet a guy, I wanted him and I to talk about God on our first date," she says. "You know, we really did."

Ric at that time was also looking for an ideal mate.

"We both played the field," Verni grants. "He was also looking for a wife and he also prayed for it."

"After three years of constant dating, Verni and Ric were married in 1995, in a very private ceremony in Pampanga, home of the Oledans. Only family members and their closest friends were invited.

Today, Ric and Verni have two kids—Gian Franco, 5, and Giana, 2.

"The most important thing is that I'm happy," says Verni. "I'm contented with my personal life and my career. My personal relationship with the Lord is also on a different level. I now have a full understanding of what life is all about. Whenever there's a problem, there's always an explanation."

Living testimony

Verni is convinced God has changed her, and she is now a living testimony of the way God works.

"I am not only singing about it, I'm also sharing the good news," she says. "I'm not saying I'm holy, but I know God has really changed me."

"One time I saw the daughter of a family friend while I was at Vira Mall in Greenhills. When she looked at me, I knew right away she would share something with me. I had to enlighten her and we prayed together. By doing that, I was able to prevent her from doing something wrong."

Before her born-again faith, Verni wouldn't have given her spiritual life any serious thought. She was living life on the fast lane and she even once lost her voice.

God's gift

"I was smoking, drinking and partying a lot. Losing my voice became an eye-opener. I realized my voice was God's gift for me and I wasn't taking care of it."

Recently, Verni even tried her hand at songwriting and has come up with three inspirational songs.

In 1998, she wrote "You Are the One," which was arranged by Homer Flores.

When she was pregnant with Giana, she wrote a Tagalog piece called "Ikaw."

Ric, who plays the piano, helped create the minus-one for another composition, "I Will."

"I pray every morning and I write my thoughts," Verni says. "I read the Bible and I ask the Holy Spirit to help me write the lyrics and create the melody. It's really amazing because I don't even know how to play any musical instrument."

Although her family remains her top priority, she continues to be a sought-after live performer both here and abroad.

Last April, Verni was overwhelmed by the reception she received from the crowd at Bellagio, a luxury hotel in Las Vegas where she did an Easter show with singer-composer Jose Mari Chan.

"After the show, we saw a long line of people outside the venue and I asked someone, 'What are they waiting for?' A little later, I was told they were waiting for Joe and me because they wanted to get our autographs and pose for souvenir photos. Most those who watched the show were Filipinos. I was very happy."

Solo concert

On July 30, Verni will perform at Hard Rock Café in Makati in a solo concert called "Jazz and Grooves" for City Lite 88.3-FM. Verni will sing hits by Janet Jackson and Lisa Stansfield, plus other songs in the jazz genre, from acid jazz to pop jazz to Latin jazz.

She will, as usual, do her famous take on Dave Brubeck's "Take Five."

"The audience is not satisfied when I don't sing it," Verni says.

Her repertoire also includes such pop hits as "Ain't No Mountain High Enough," "Follow Your Road" and "There You'll Be," the theme from "Pearl Harbor," recorded by Faith Hill.

As well, as she will do "Kahit Isang Saglit," which she recorded earlier than Martin Nievera's version.

"People might still see me as a tease, but on a different level," Verni says. "Apart from entertaining, I want to inspire my audience."

ANSWERED prayers. Verni Varga says she is a living example of how God works.

Why Princess is getting out of the show biz trap

I'M SURE most of you watched Boy Abunda's one-on-one interview with Princess Punzalan on "The Buzz" a few weeks ago. For those who missed it: Cess cried as she explained why she decided to turn her back on show biz and to start a new life in New York before the year is over.

People who don't know Princess personally wonder why she sounded so unhappy about show biz and why she's sick of being stared at and being talked about. Cess is like a sister to me so I understand her. She's a simple person who got entangled in the complicated world of show biz. She's in show biz but she's not of show biz.

DOLLYWOOD

Pardon me for saying this but many stars have been eaten up by the system. In show biz parlance, such stars are "showbiz na showbiz." They are so wrapped up in the trappings of fame and fortune. They don't realize that trappings are a trap.

Show biz is not everything it's cracked up to be. There's a flip side to all the glitter and glamour. The sad part is, some stars get blinded by the flash.

As my mom always says, "If you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen."

Here's Princess' final say about the issue.

"Boy asked me a question and I just answered it with all honesty. As long as the people close to me understand what I mean, okay lang kung anong tingin sa akin ng ibang tao."

To my dear Cess: A part of me will always be with you wherever you go. Thanks for not letting show biz change you a bit. The you I've come to love as a sister."

Personal

HAPPY happy Birthday to Eric C. I celebrate this day because it brought you into the world and made it more wonderful for me. Je Te aime.

Just asking

COULD it be true that Ryan Cayabyab is migrating to the United States with his family but he wants to keep it hush-hush? If this is so, Ryan will be a big loss to the music industry. He's irreplaceable. Hope he's not about to write his swan song.

Is it true that the father of the forthcoming baby of Abby Viduya (a.k.a. Priscilla Almeda) is a handsome waiter in the United States? Wonder if marriage to Abby is on his menu.

STOCK MARKET

Stocks fall to new low

STOCKS ended at a fresh eight-month low yesterday on a bleak economic outlook, but soft drinks firm Cosmos Bottling Corp. surged on rumors that a takeover by beer giant San Miguel Corp. would be announced this week.

"The focus on the RFM-Cosmos-San Miguel deal is there. The speculation is it will be closed soon," said KGI Securities stock analyst Dara Calderon.

The Philippine main index closed 3.01 points or 0.22 percent lower at 1,366.01 points. It was the lowest since the index closed at 1,287.85 points on Oct. 31.

Decliners outpaced gainers 52 to 28, with 42 stocks unchanged, on volume of P472.19 million.

Cosmos, the country's second largest soft drinks firm, was the most actively traded stock, jumping 60 centavos to P5.30. It accounted for 34 percent of the market's value turnover.

Analysts, however, said overall sentiment was morose over doubts on whether the economy would recover in the second half of the year based on economic and social reforms promised by President Macapagal Arroyo. "In general, the market remained sluggish. The volume is still thin. Confidence will be built over time. The programs proposed by government can't happen overnight. And the market wants concrete results," Calderon said.

"The market is just cautious about everything, the peso, the economy... But if you look at which pulled the market lower, it's index heavyweight Ayala Corp.," said BPI Securities stock analyst Roberto Cano. Reuters

Mirant, DOE sign pact

MIRANT Philippines yesterday signed a memorandum of agreement with the Department of Energy for its commitment to light up 53 remote barangays in Mindoro under the "O-flaw" electrification program.

The biggest independent power producer in the country will spend about P53 million for the project.

"We believe that the fundamentals of the Philippine economy remain sound for the long term and we will remain committed to be a significant participant in the development of the local energy market," said Marce Fuller, global president of Mirant Corp.

For his part, Energy Secretary Vincent S. Perez encouraged other IPPs "to take a direct hand in the electrification of barangays in provinces that host their power plants."

According to data from the National Electrification Administration, 7,776 barangays remain without electricity.

The government aims to electrify all of the country's 42,000 barangays by 2004.

"We plan to energize four barangays a day or 1,500 barangays by end-June of 2002," Perez said.

If this goal is met, 85 percent of all barangays would benefit from the electrification program.

Mirant has previously helped to bring electricity to 45 barangays in Quezon province and another 45 in Camarines Sur.

Several other IPPs have also agreed to help in lighting some 1,500 barangays.

Earlier this month, Toledo Power Corp. signed a memorandum of agreement with government agencies and a local electric cooperative to energize 10 barangays.

BIR to look into books of forex traders, clients

BY CLARISSA S. BATINO

THE DEPARTMENT of Finance has directed the Bureau of Internal Revenue to investigate an initial 27 foreign exchange traders from banks and money-changing companies as well as 14 large clients to see if they had cheated the government of its much-needed revenue.

"I have instructed the BIR to examine the books of these foreign exchange traders just to make sure they are not making money (at the expense of) the government," Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho said.

The Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas has been coordinating with the DOF on the list of the banks, money-changing subsidiaries, their traders and their clients, according to Bangko Sentral Deputy Governor Alberto Reyes.

Reyes said the government wanted to find out whether the traders and their clients have been paying the right taxes for previous and current transactions.

"The government wants to know how these traders and clients were able to finance their forex transactions, what their source of funding was, and if their funding was justified by their income," the BSP official said.

Reyes declined to say if the DOF was using the central bank's list of the banks and their officers being suspected of "willfully and habitually" speculating against the peso.

The Bangko Sentral official admitted that the central bank continued "to see some evidence of speculation in the foreign exchange market."

From the central bank's end, Reyes said the Bangko Sentral has just received the letters from banks explaining their respective foreign exchange activities that were earlier questioned by regulators.

The Bangko Sentral has not meted out any penalty on any of the banks or money-changing companies suspected of speculating against the peso.

Meantime, Reyes said the plan to reduce by half the ceiling for "undocumented transactions" from $10,000 would be discussed by the policy-making Monetary Board in its regular meeting today.

The BSP earlier released a new set of stricter penalties for banks and their officers found speculating against the peso.

The new non-monetary penalties included the suspension and permanent disqualification of bank officers (including bank directors and country managers), suspension of activities like derivatives trading and foreign currency deposit unit authority.

The central bank also said it would impose a P30,000 fine for every violation.

Last week, the Bangko Sentral expanded its foreign exchange hedging facility while the DOF vowed to speed up its foreign borrowings to provide the central bank with more ammunition to fight speculators.

The finance department is also planning to offer a new hedging facility for investors on top of the central bank's forward cover for big importers in need of dollars.

Tan wants to keep PNB stake

BY CLARISSA S. BATINO

TAIPAN Lucio Tan is not giving up part of his 67-percent stake in Philippine National Bank in favor of the State and is only willing to yield management control so the government could help turnaround the bank's finances.

INQUIRER sources said that contrary to what the government had been claiming, the taipan was insisting on retaining ownership control of the country's sixth largest bank, which is saddled with huge non-performing loans.

PNB chair Norberto Nazareno yesterday admitted that Tan has not agreed to cut his stake in PNB so that the government could boost its 16-percent ownership back to less than 51 percent.

"There is nothing definite in that issue yet. We want to come to terms with him on that issue in the next two weeks," said Nazareno, who is also president of Philippine Deposit Insurance Corp.

The PNB chair said that the government and Tan's group has only agreed "to let the State have a more direct hand in the rehabilitation of PNB."

"What we have yet to determine is how much equity the government can buy and at what price," Nazareno said. But this issue would only be answered if or when Tan finally agrees to give up part of his equity in favor of the government.

Sources claimed the taipan had been stalling efforts of the government to come up with a "compromise" on the issue of the reverse privatization or re-nationalization of the bank.

Since mid-May, the government led by Nazareno had been negotiating with the taipan's lawyers. The government earlier thought Tan had agreed to the plan after one of his advisers, a former central bank governor, noted that the plan of the government to retake control of PNB was sound.

The government wanted to retake less than 51 percent of PNB through the conversion into equity of the P15 billion and P10 billion in loans extended respectively by the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas and PDIC to the ailing bank last October.

The plan, dubbed as a re-nationalization or reverse privatization, would consequently reduce Tan's stake close to a minority position. After the government has turned PNB's operations around, it will sell its stake to keep its promise to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank that the government would get out of PNB.

The government was diluted to only 16 percent in PNB from 30.4 percent while the taipan gained majority last September when Tan infused P10 billion into the bank.

PNB shares had been trading below P45 each or less than a third of the taipan's investment cost.

Last year, PNB posted a net loss of P5.97 billion from an earlier estimate of only P1 billion.

Prospective investors eye Itoyon

BY DORIS C. DUMLAO

INTERNET upstart Philweb.com Inc. businessman Roberto Ongpin is talking with six groups, including businessman Antonio "Tonyboy" Cojuangco, for possible investment in dormant mining firm Itoyon Suyoc Mines Inc.

Ongpin told reporters after the annual ISMI stockholders' meeting yesterday that his group has started discussions with new investors to boost the company's bid to shift to the information technology business.

"It is premature to talk about any project at this time," Ongpin said, noting that Cojuangco was only "one of the six groups we are in discussions with."

"There are many of them who are interested but we haven't signed any agreement," Ongpin said.

Cojuangco owns Philippine Multimedia Systems Inc., the only company offering direct-to-home services in the Philippines. It has invested more than P1 billion in a service it launched last April dubbed as "Dream Broadcasting System."

Direct-to-home service is essentially a video and data service using satellite technology. It is a cheaper alternative to the traditional coaxial cable used by cable television as it uses setup boxes and small satellite dishes to make the system work.

There has been a lot of speculation in the stock market that ISMI might be used as a backdoor listing vehicle for Cojuangco's satellite TV business.

During the stockholders' meeting, Ongpin and two other Philweb officials were elected directors of ISMI—Jaime Gonzales and Philweb president Alex Villamar. Ongpin also said he would soon be elected chair of the company's board of directors as part of the deal with the Ortigas family, which controls ISMI.

ISMI earlier signed a memorandum of agreement to sell about 40 percent of ISMI to Philweb at a par value of one centavo per share, ISMI, however, is still seeking clearance from the Philippine Stock Exchange, which limits the price discount at which a publicly listed company can sell additional shares.

As of press time, the PSE has yet to decide whether to exempt ISMI from the regulation against the offering of shares at a discount beyond 10 percent of a listed company's average market or its book value, whichever is higher. Otherwise, a stock rights offering must be conducted to prevent the unfair dilution of the holdings of other shareholders.

Ongpin said the stockholders' structure of ISMI would be finalized once the group has identified the projects needed for its conversion into an IT company.

Intel science fair stresses importance of technology among Filipino youth

THE ABILITY to use computers has become indispensable to educational, career, social and cultural advancement. Technology literacy is now a "must" skill and a basic job requirement. But even with a growing part of the national and global economy depending on the technology sector, few students—surprisingly even in the US are entering these careers.

In the Philippines, the Intel Philippine Science Fair, one of the key Intel innovation in education programs in the country, is encouraging students to take up science and technology-related courses in order to give education the high-tech lift it needs for the country to progress.

Intel innovation in education is a global multi-million initiative to prepare students as well as teachers for tomorrow's scientific and technological demands.

About the fair

The Intel Philippine Science Fair is full-funded by Intel and organized by the Department of Science and Technology-Science Education Institute (DOST-SEI) in cooperation with the Department of Education, Culture and Sports (DECS). The fair, which started in 1996, is an annual nationwide competition to discover and recognize the country's best student-scientists.

More than getting students interested in science and math (the pillars of the technology wave), however, the Intel Philippine Science Fair gives them a chance to earn international recognition in the Intel International Science and Engineering Fair (Intel ISEF). The Intel ISEF is the world's largest science fair, drawing thousands of students from more than 47 countries, including the Philippines.

Since the Intel Philippine Science Fair's inception, thousands of students from Luzon, Visayas and Mindanao have joined and thousands more are joining every year. As a result, the fair has become the largest science project competition after only a short span of four years.

An award-winning program

Apart from being the country's largest gathering of the brightest student-scientists, the Intel Philippine Science Fair is also known as the most prestigious. To date, it has won three Anvil Awards: the Grand Anvil in 2001 and the Anvil Award of Excellence in 1999 and 2000.

The Grand Anvil is the most coveted recognition given to a public relations program which has created a tremendous impact not only on its target audience but the general public as well. The Anvil Awards of the Public Relations Society of the Philippines is considered the "Oscar" of the PR industry.

Kimberly-Clark wins pollution control award

FOR its outstanding efforts to control pollution and adopt a comprehensive water recycling program, Kimberly-Clark Philippines Inc. (K-CPI) has been named by the Pollution Control Association of the Philippines Inc. (Pcapi) as one of its "Success Stories" for this year.

K-CPI vice president for mill operations Leopoldo Baylon received the recognition on behalf of K-CPI during the awarding ceremonies held early this month at the Development Academy of the Philippines in Tagaytay City.

Pcapi cited K-CPI for having achieved an 87-percent reduction of its fresh water usage since 1991, 100-percent recycled water in tissue manufacturing and de-inking operations and annual cost savings of around P3.9 million.

Baylon said K-CPI has invested more than P100 million since the early 1990s to upgrade its wastewater treatment facilities and will continue to invest in initiatives to ensure preservation of its surrounding environment.

Last year, K-CPI completed a new wastewater treatment plant which produces treated effluent that is significantly lower than the Discharge Limit Values set in the Laguna Lake Development Authority discharge permit and the Philippine Effluent Regulations of 1990.

Aside from K-CPI, the pollution control group also cited the National Power Corp. and Coca-Cola Bacolod City Plant as the other "Success Stories" for this year. The awards were handed out by Pcapi in commemoration of Earth Day.

K-CPI is a leading consumer products company, operating in the Philippines for more than 35 years and providing jobs to more than 900 employees. The company is an affiliate Kimberly-Clark Corp., which has operations in 40 countries and sells products in more than 150 countries.

Q. What's the difference between alcohol, liquor, liqueur, and wine?

A. Alcohol is the intoxicating element in fermented beverages such as wine, beer or spirits, and is the result of the fermentation of various carbohydrates such as grain, starch, sugar, molasses, etc. Liquor is an alcoholic beverage that is mildly distilled (purified by vaporization and condensation), such as whiskey or rum, or spirituous (strongly distilled and usually containing more alcohol), such as gin. Colloquially, the word "alcohol" is often used in place of "liquor." Liqueur is any sweet, often syrupy, highly flavored spirituous drink, such as absinthe or Chartreuse, often served as an aperitif. Finally, there's wine, which is the fermented juice of grapes. Wine can be white or red, sugary or not (sweet or dry), and "strengthened" with alcohol.

For the Record. The salt in sea water comes mainly from the fresh water that flows into the sea. As rivers and streams flow across the land, they absorb a lot of salt from rocks and the earth, and they carry this salt out to sea. There the fresh water evaporates, leaving the salt deposits behind.

A Friendly Reminder. Keep in mind that when a tidal wave is about to hit a coastline, the water first recedes all the way to the horizon. This means that an unwitting, adventurous person could walk out several kilometers before the wave came smashing ashore at terrific speed.

Mindanao still deemed as good investment area

DIGOS CITY—Despite the Abu Sayyaf crisis and the perceived worsening peace and order situation, Mindanao is still a sound area for investment, a ranking development agency official said.

Randolph Parcasio, administrator of the Southern Philippines Development Authority (SPDA), said foreign investors have expressed their willingness to infuse money into "big-ticket and labor-intensive projects" in the island.

"During our preliminary and exploratory talks on investment possibilities, these investors said they are not at all threatened by the existence of the Abu Sayyaf," Parcasio said.

He said the foreign investors, whom he said represent large companies in the United States, the Middle East and the ASEAN, were more keen on the promises of Mindanao, particularly its economic potentials.

"(Because of this), they have reconsidered earlier plans to go elsewhere," he said.

Parcasio said the SPDA has briefed the investors about "the true situation in Mindanao" and that they understood that the trouble is limited to some areas and "has little effect on the productivity and the tranquility of the island as a whole."

Among the areas being eyed for development by the investors are the agriculture and the export industries.

"(And) they are open to long-term and large-scale investments," he said.

Parcasio said being a development agency created by a presidential decree about 26 years ago, SPDA has full powers to undertake effort to generate investments in the island.

"SPDA is fully clothed with power to generate and make investments that would enhance the economic progress of Mindanao," he said.

He also bared that project tie-ups with the foreign investors particularly on efforts to put in place more development projects are underway.

"Project tie-ups are in the works. It may only be just a matter of time before we see the entry of development projects that will help raise the quality of life of Mindanaoans," Parcasio said.

At least 26 corporate programs and projects all over the island are included in this project tie-up.

These are mostly found in the provinces of Zamboanga, Misamis, Davao, Cotabato, Lanao areas and even in crisis-stricken Sulu and Tawi-tawi.

Gov't seen to raise P42B in new borrowings in July

BY CLARISSA S. BATINO

THE MACAPAGAL administration plans to raise about P42 billion in new foreign and local borrowings next month from the issuance of two distinct dollar-linked instruments.

Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho said the government could get as much as P30 billion from the offering next month of a low-yielding two- and three-year debt papers to be paid at the prevailing exchange rate at the time of the maturity.

Yesterday, the government signed an P11.81-billion fixed-rate borrowing deal with 19 foreign and local lenders led by HSBC. The money to be released on Aug. 1 will be converted on the same day into an HSBC borrowing worth $220.4 million.

Camacho said this was the first-of-its-kind deal that the government has entered into. "We hope to receive other creative proposals to finance our needs," he said.

National Treasurer Sergio Edeza said the fixed-rate borrowing arranged by HSBC was obtained at a favorable spread of 1.7 percentage points for the three-year instruments and 1.9 percentage points for the five-year instruments over six-month London Interbank Offered Rate.

The prevailing rate for the three- and five-year borrowings in the market command spreads of 3.25 percentage points and 4.25 percentage points over Libor, respectively.

Edeza said the national government was able to save $18.8 million or more than P1 billion in interest payments because of the favorable pricing. "If we had borrowed dollars from the foreign market, the investors would have factored in sovereign as well as emerging markets risks," he said.

HSBC said the 19 institutions that pooled the P11.81 billion in funds would earn a yield of 14 percent for the three-year notes and 14.25 percent for the five-year instruments.

Of the total amount tapped, 53 percent will have a three-year tenor while the remaining 47 percent will carry a five-year maturity. Investors said the yield on the peso instrument was attractive enough to merit their participation.

Edeza said the investors need not pay withholding taxes for the new instrument but the transaction would be slapped a 35-percent corporate income tax as well as a 5-percent gross receipts tax.

HSBC said it had agreed to arrange the borrowing because it could manage the risks involved in the transaction.

"We know the kind of risks and we could price it (the borrowing) properly because we are here. By taking on the borrowing, HSBC demonstrates its confidence in the Philippines," said Joel Consing of HSBC.

The finance chief said the government would finalize "very soon" a two-and-three-year debt papers that would give investors a chance to hedge.

The new borrowing is being arranged by RCBC Capital, Multinational Investment Bancorporation, and Deutsche Bank.

MERRILL LYNCH STUDY

Property market to recover in 2004

BY DORIS C. DUMLAO

IT WILL likely take the local property market three more years to recover from the slump experienced since the Asian currency turmoil, according to a study by foreign broker Merrill Lynch Securities Philippines Inc.

A study on the property markets in Thailand, Indonesia and the Philippines, authored by Merrill Lynch VP for research Alfred Dy, said rents and capital values of properties in the country were expected to bottom out this year but they were seen to remain flat in the next two years.

"It would take quite a while for the overall property market to recover. Recovery in capital values and rents should only start to happen in 2004. We believe that vacancy rates have to fall first before capital values and rents would start to recover," the study noted.

The study said that four years after the Asian financial crisis of 1997, the office sector in these three crisis-hit countries remained sluggish. It noted that the vacancy rate in the Philippines stood at 15 percent while those in Indonesia and Thailand were higher at 22 percent and 31 percent, respectively.

"Vacancies seem to have already peaked in Thailand and Indonesia, and are expected to peak in the Philippines this year," the study said.

It also noted that the oversupply of office space had pulled down capital values and rental rates to less than 50 percent of the peak levels. It, however, projected that the vacancy rates might first fall to single-digit levels before capital values and rental rates would improve. "This is to happen within the next two years," the study said.

The study projected that the vacancy rate in the Makati central business district might increase to 15.3 percent this year and in the Ortigas CBD, to hit 24.9 percent.

"Taken collectively, vacancy rates should hit 17.9 percent in 2001. For 2002, we foresee vacancy rates easing to 12 percent in the Makati CBD, but surging further to 27.7 percent in Ortigas. We expect vacancy rates to be 16.5 percent for both CBDs in 2002," it said.

The study projected that the vacancy rate might fall below 10 percent by 2004—Makati at 5.3 percent and Ortigas

By 2004, the study said that some of the deferred high-rise commercial projects might be revived. These include the Jaka Tower (30,344sq.m.), Westmont Bank Building (35,327sq.m.) and World Commerce Plaza (24,000sq.m.).

"Should implementation of these projects restart in 2002, we expect Jaka Tower to be completed by the fourth quarter of 2003. Westmont Bank and World Commerce Plaza will likely be completed in the third quarter of 2004. We believe this will result in higher vacancy rates of 14 percent in 2003 and 12 percent in 2004. Under this scenario, vacancy rates in both Makati and Ortigas would fall below 10 percent only in 2005," it said.

In Thailand, the study said that in view of improvements seen in the Bangkok office market since early 2000, there could be a recovery in the rental rates as early as 2002 and 2003.

In Indonesia, the study said vacancy rate would likely fall below 10 percent in 2005. It projected that capital values and rental rates in this country would remain lackluster in the years ahead.

Yacht club chief bucks SBMA plan to put up casino

BY GIL C. CABACUNGAN JR.

RESTAURATEUR Victor "Vic-Vic" Villavicencio said yesterday he would block plans to put up a casino at the Subic Bay Yacht Club as long as he remained "captain" of the premier Philippine marina.

In a news statement, Villavicencio said he and other club members would never consider a casino or any other form of gambling at the Subic Bay Yacht Club, as they wanted to keep its image as a wholesome destination for vacationers.

Villavicencio was reacting to Subic Bay Metropolitan Authority Chair Felicitio Payumo's report that creditor banks of Subic Bay Yacht Club led by Land Bank of the Philippines were planning to put up a second casino or a Las Vegas-type family entertainment center inside the club's premises to ease its cash flow problems.

Subic Bay Yacht Club's 12 creditor banks foreclosed on the flamboyant businessman's P1 billion loans early this year and obtained 40 percent, or 1,200, of the club's 3,000 outstanding shares.

The creditor banks have proposed to name 10 instead of five nominees to Subic Bay Yacht Club's 11-member board ahead of their plan to get interested bidders on Aug. 2.

Villavicencio said these banks were free to sell their shares as long as management was properly informed.

He said Payumo "should have been fully aware that the SBMA had already granted exclusive rights to Legenda Hotels to operate a casino inside (Subic Bay)."

Payumo earlier stressed that his position as commodore was equivalent to the president of a corporation and his Subic Bay Waterfront Development Corp. had a contract to run the club until 2004.

He stressed that SBWDC had a net worth of P1.7 billion and it had no outstanding obligations.

ANTI-NAÑAGAS CAMPAIGN

DOF moves to settle SSS row

FINANCE Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho and Social Security System executive vice president Horacio Templo are set to hold meetings to settle a two-month labor-management conflict hitting the SSS.

In an interview, Templo said he would bring to Camacho's attention efforts by SSS employees to oust SSS president Vitaliano Nañagas II. Templo is supporting this demand.

Templo also expressed hope that newly appointed SSS Chair Bernardino Abes would be able to put an end to anti-Nañagas lunch-time protest actions that had interrupted operations at the SSS.

Abes was a labor secretary and SSS chief under former President Diosdado Macapagal, father of incumbent President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo.

Camacho had said he was looking forward to meeting Templo.

Templo earlier backpedaled from a commitment to resign this week, saying his decision to stay on was prompted by appeals from employees of the SSS.

Templo, a career official, is the most senior SSS executive to join the anti-Nañagas lobby.

For over two months, SSS employees have been holding noise barrages and rallies to force Nañagas to step down. They are opposing Nañagas' efforts to privatize the SSS.

In an interview, Ramon San Andres Jr., Alert and Concerned Employees for a better SSS national spokesperson, said the 2,800-strong union scored Nañagas' "tyrannical" and "despotic" management style.

Nañagas has threatened to fire executives who have supported moves to oust him.

San Andres said around 2,600 rank-and-file employees and executives had signed a petition seeking Nañagas' ouster. Elena R. Torrijos

Toyota Altis competes with Honda Civic, Nissan Grandeur

BY TESSA R. SALAZAR

TOYOTA'S strategy to come out with the new Corolla Altis in the middle of the year seems to have worked in its favor. After collecting enough market data to suitably equip the Altis and the Corolla model line with competitive features, Toyota has positioned its sedans for a younger market. A market in need of more flash for its cash and more cubic centimeters around the engine block.

The battle between the newcomers was reignited earlier when Nissan revealed its handsome Exalta Grandeur. Honda's cavernous Civic barely touched the market's surface when the completely refurbished Sentra came out.

Mitsubishi had played it safe and simply introduced the Lancer late in 2000 for an early 2001 release. What looms over the horizon for Lancer is an all-new body-drive-train configuration, which is already found in most of Japan's cars and in parts of Southeast Asia. Mitsubishi might yet surprise the market with a new toy in the near future.

This comparison pits the latest additions intended to "pump-prime" the sagging sedan market: the 2001 Honda Civic, the Nissan Grandeur and the newest Corolla Altis. To put things in their proper perspectives, we'll discuss each in full trim and all in automatic transmission.

Get motivated

Motivated by three different engine platforms, the three sedans cannot compare by engine fact sheet alone. The Altis displaces 1,794 cc., the Sentra 1,597, the Civic 1,590. Maximum power spread is wider than a direct 1.6- to 1.6 comparison. Toyota's 17Z-FE engine outputs 145 hp at 6,000 rpm. Nissan's revamped GA series, QG16DE pumps out 114 hp @ 6,000 rpm. While Honda's small block VTEC3 extracts 128 hp at a 6,600 top end.

Transmission type has the new Altis 1.8G A/T with super ECT Gate-type shift with power mode selector while the Exalta's 1.6G Grandeur has an A/T with electronic transmission. Civic's 1.6Vti-S has a four-speed AT. In addition, Altis has "Jaguar-like gated shifter" on its Electronically Controlled Transmission while Sentra/Altis have four wheel discs, Honda with disc front, drum rear.

Theoretically, handling chores are best done with sophisticated setups, but all three cars follow simple pivoting controls.

TOYOTA Altis

HONDA Civic

Up front it's McPhersons for both the Altis and Sentra and an offset-pivot toe control link for the Honda. In the back it's a simple beam assembly with stabilizers for the Corolla. Nissan retains its sophisticated (dubbed as the best setup for front wheel drive vehicles) Multi-Link Beam suspension. Honda keeps a wishbone-like arm and link setup, which is amazingly as taut and secure as its previous F1 suspension copies.

Parity party

The air-conditioning is almost the same. The comparison sheets under the dealer options showed Altis aircon system on a Nippondenso auto climate control using digital push type controls, the Grandeur a full auto with sunload sensor with digital push type controls and the Civic with HADSYS. Audio system shows Corolla's Fujitsu Ten 2-Din Radio/Cassette/In-dash single CD while Grandeur has Clarion 1-Din Radio/Cassette/6-disc CD changer.

Honda Civic has Kenwood 1-din radio/Mp-3/In-dash single CD.

The sizes have incremental differences. Dimension comparison shows Altis 1.8G A/T has an L x W x H (mm) of 4,530 x 1,705 x 1,500 while Exalta G Grandeur A/T has 4,470 x 1,710 x 1,440. Meanwhile, Honda Civic 1.6 Vti-S A/T's dimension is 4,435 x 1,720 x 1,455.

There's no significant difference in the wheelbase either. In mm, Altis has 2,600, Grandeur has 2,535 and Civic has 2,620.

In exterior comparisons, the three have multireflector, four-lamp headlights. Sentra, in particular, has four-lamp complex surface reflector or CSR. Outside door handles (grip type) are all color-keyed for the three.

Minimum turning radius? There's not much difference either. Altis has 5.2 meters, Sentra has 4.8 and 5.4 for Civic.

And there isn't much difference in the ground clearances. Altis clears at 180 mm, Exalta at 150 mm, while Civic is at 170 mm.

The steering system's almost the same for the three. For engine chassis comparison, all have shift lock mechanism, front brakes all have ventilated discs while for the rear brakes, the Altis has discs, Sentra uses solid discs and Civic uses drums.

Differences

Altis, expectedly, offers a Global Outstanding Assessment body as one of its safety features. Exalta has a zone body concept/soft roof side rails while Honda has its crumple zone.

The SRS airbag is dual electronic for Altis and Civic, while the left side of the driver of the Exalta has an airbag.

The comparison sheet also shows that only Altis has a whiplash injury lessening (WIL) feature. Altis and Civic both have window jam protection on the driver's side while Exalta has none. Both Altis and Exalta have child lock protection systems.

Only Exalta has a rear back-up sensor. Its Optitron display is nice, but the heads up dispensed counter is an added safety feature, it allows one to peek at the controls without taking their eyes off the road. In addition, Sentra's speed sensing door locks is superb for forgetful drivers.

Only the Civic doesn't have a catalytic converter with its VTEC engines in place.

In the end, what we have are choices, choices and more choices for the Filipino motorist. The real story for these new crop of cars is parity, not difference.

Toyota expects sales to fall 8% this year

BY GIL CABACUNGAN

THE COUNTRY'S leading automotive assembler, Toyota Motor Philippines Corp., is projecting reversal in fortune this year as sales are expected to fall by 8 percent wiping out last year's gains.

Toyota Philippines president Takeshi Fukuda made the gloomy forecast during last week's unveiling of the new Toyota Corolla, its compact sedan model, which it is betting on to regain its leadership position in the passenger car segment held by the Honda Civic.

Fukuda said sales are expected to hit 22,000 units this year from 24,000 units a year ago. This year's sales forecast is marginally higher than the 21,613 units Toyota sold in 1999, when the industry slump hit its bottom.

"We hit the bottom in 1999 and we are likely to make a double dip this year," Fukuda said.

Enthusiasm over the change in administration in January has apparently turned into disappointment as the continued political and security crisis pummel consumer confidence while the peso's weakness jack up costs which assemblers are forced to absorb for fear of further driving away consumers.

On top of these broad problems, Toyota Philippines was forced to close down its plants for more than week due to labor problems which has caused delays in production, particularly of its best-selling Asian utility vehicle model, the Tamaraw Revo.

The Chamber of Automotive Manufacturers of the Philippines Inc. (Campi) reported a 14.8 percent decline in sales to 35,379 in the first half this year from 41,523 last year. Sales jumped 12.8 percent increase in sales to 83,949 units from 74,414 units in 1999, snapping a 2-year slump.

Despite the gloomy outlook, Fukuda said it was ripe for Toyota Philippines to train its sights on regaining lost ground in the passenger market by introducing the new Toyota Corolla.

Since the financial crisis struck in 1997, Fukuda said Toyota Philippines had to focus on its most salable product, the Tamaraw, in order to weather the storm.

Southeast Asia auto sales rise but lower than expected

SINGAPORE—New vehicle sales in Southeast Asia's four biggest markets rose 9.0 percent in the five months of this year, weighed down by a weak performance in the Philippines, an industry monitor said Tuesday.

The Philippines was the only market to experience a decline with a fall of 15 percent, Automotive Resources Asia Ltd. (ARA) said in its latest report.

New vehicle sales in Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand and the Philippines from January to May totaled 400,200 units, up from 367,333 units last year.

"The Thai, Indonesian and Malaysian automotive markets continue to recover at respectable rates, despite the countries' uncertain economic conditions," said ARA associate May Arthapan.

But in the Philippines, "unresolved political and social problems are cutting into consumer confidence," Arthapan said.

Thailand posted the biggest increase in percentage terms, with sales up 14 percent to 112,903 vehicles, while the Malaysian market rose 11 percent to 150,287 and Indonesia was up 9 percent to 108,058 units.

In the Philippines, sales dropped 15 percent to 28,952 vehicles from 34,024 in the same period last year.

The Philippines this year has seen a popular uprising that toppled President Joseph Estrada in favor of Vice President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, followed by riots and a march on the presidential palace by 50,000 Estrada supporters after he was charged with plunder which carries the death penalty.

Malaysia's national car Proton remained the most popular make in the four countries with a 20-percent share of the market, followed by Toyota with 15 percent, and Mitsubishi and Isuzu with 11 percent each.

Most of the rest of the market is shared by Malaysia's Perodua and Japanese carmakers Honda and Nissan.

Talking your way to better auto service

GETTING your vehicle serviced is always a taxing job. Apart from the money it's going to cost you, there are lots of horror stories about repair shops floating around your fertile mind.

With any other conflicts, all can be resolved through better communication, Isuzu Philippines Corp., "your responsible partner," gives us some points to ponder on how to communicate for better auto servicing.

• Do your homework—Be prepared to describe your vehicle's problem. Be as detailed as possible. Write down your specific complaint to save time and avoid misunderstanding.

• Too many cooks spoil the broth—Fight the urge to recommend your own diagnosis or a particular course of repair. Let the experts handle the job and respect their own decision.

• Curiosity did not kill the cat—Do not hesitate to ask questions. It's your vehicle. You deserve to know what they are going to do to it. Be involved in every step of the way. You never know, you might learn a thing or two about vehicle maintenance and simple repairs.

• Just do it—Never demand an on-the-spot diagnosis on your vehicle. Technicians need to spot the exact problem to be able to do what needs to be done. Give them ample time to evaluate their findings and plan their specific action before the work ever begins.

WHAT IS HYDROCRACKING PROCESS?

A product of fertile imagination.

Not too much imagination needed.

Going back to the question, Hydrocracking Process is Conoco's secret weapon for their lubricants. It is a radically new refining process that transforms crude oils into base stocks of unparalleled purity. An advanced technology that leaves behind solvent-refined lubes because it works like synthetics.

Conoco is the first company to offer a full-line 100% hydrocracked products called --- HYDROCLEAR. Conoco HYDROCLEAR is the first of a new class of lubricants made from pure hydrocracked base oils.

HYDROCRACKED OIL CONVENTIONAL SOLVENT-REFINED OIL

A test was run both for Conoco HYDROCLEAR Lubricants and other conventional solvent-refined oils. After 1,000 hours of exposure to heat and water, HYDROCLEAR oils resisted oxidation three times longer, ran twice as clean and showed no corrosion. This translates to an increase in oil performance, more protection to your engine and gives you a lot of savings.

Imagine that.

RE-DEFINING LUBRICATION

THINGS NO ONE WANTS TO TALK ABOUT IN F1

Hurrah for the back markers!

BY RAYMOND B. TRIBDINO

IN FORMULA One, it gets tiresome to see that red car always finish in front of a black-and-silver one over and over again. The unexpected entry of the blue-and-white Williams-BMW-Compaq piloted by Ralf Schumacher broke the ice, and on occasion a green racing suit stood on the lowest podium step. F1 fans would like more unpredictability, but alas the tarmac scraping teams will always have to make its own battles one lap down.

So three cheers for the underdog! With the F1 season just six races away from closing, here is a quick peek into what we might see from the bottom-of-the-heap teams, struggling to keep up with the big boys.

European Minardi

The 200-meter distance inside the F1 pitlane also illustrates the differences in budget between Ferrari and the struggling European-Minardi team. Schumacher's US$25 million-a-year salary (give or take a million) represents the team's total annual budget.

Minardi epitomizes the real motorsport enthusiast. Perpetually poor. Always tired. But determined.

Powered by old engines and propelled by the love of the sport, the team's drivers, Tarso Marques (F1 returnee and soon to be outcast) and Fernando Alonso (F3 champ turned test driver, turned consistent back marker and lately perennial late-braker) are not exactly the most skilled of pilots.

Combine slow car with not-so-good driver and get constant headaches for front runners. Hey, but their pit stops aren't bad at all. All within the 9- to 12-second bracket. (Except for about three or four flukes that just cost them the race.)

What the wires will say: Alonso Trapped in Gravel (Again For The Third Time). Total points as of Silverstone: none, zero zilch. Does anyone root for Minardi? One. Me.

IRVIN gets it sideways at Silverstone

Orange Arrows

"The future is bright, the future is Orange," runs the corporate tagline of telecom giant Orange. Indeed the future is bright for Orange Arrows with one point in their belt courtesy of Jos "the Boss" Verstappen.

If championship points were determined by the time the track camera follows a car Orange Arrows would be No. 1. In the second race at Sepang, Verstappen first rocketed to sixth from a dismal 12th grid start. Later he tailed and blocked Hakkinen to no end, finally giving up only when he had to preserve his Asiatech engine. That was worth about 14 laps of coverage. Succeeding races saw him either drive along with the top 10, spin out, blow his engine all for television coverage.

Teammate Enrico Bernoldi is fast and sure footed. For a while, he seemed to have been color blind, failing to notice the furiously waving blue flags. This specially irked David Coulthard in one particular race that saw the Arrows battle for 14th place.

The move so irked McLaren that Ron Dennis unceremoniously rushed down pitlane to rebuke the Orange shirts.

Arrows Press Release: Jos Voted To Arrows Board; Moving Ads Department. Total points as of Silverstone: One. Most Determined Driver Award: Jos Verstappen. Most irritating back marker award: Enrico Bernoldi. Total points since Silverstone: 1

Benetton-Mild Seven

Jenson Button's transfer to Benetton on loan from Sir Frank Williams was the ultimate hype for a team struggling to get back on top. Seven years ago, Michael Schumacher piloted the Renault-engine Benetton to victory-after-victory, a legacy the struggling team is trying to regain.

Mike Gascoyne, chief designer of the B201 propelled by a Renault RS21 V10 flat engine was thought to have a winning car that would immediately produce good results. Unfortunately the other teams were way ahead of the Benetton in terms of testing and development.

It also helped little that the young and inexperienced Button joined the team. He has had more misfortunes than his Italian teammate Giancarlo Fisichella, who gained the team's sole point. They are however consistent finishers, which does a lot for testing and development of the car.

Benetton Shirts: We Want To Win But Can't Spell The Word. Unofficial Benetton Theme Song: "I Will Survive." Most failed hype for a driver: Jenson Button. Technology points: Renault Flat Engine Technology. Total points since Silverstone: 1

Acer Prost

Proving that a world champion driver does not a championship team make, Alain Prost's F1 team isn't doing much justice to that Ferrari V10 engine pulsating in the back. Okay, it isn't Monsieur Prost's fault entirely. After the San Marino race, Gaston Mazzacane left to be replaced by ex-Jaguar driver Luciano Burti.

QUALIFYING run for Verstappen

Henri Durand was hired at the initial stages of the development of the APO4 race car to take care of aerodynamics. Ferrari commissioned a technical team to help develop the car and these elements should combine to produce a stellar team. But it hasn't.

At Silverstone Alesi finished 11th with a full fuel load and general lack of grip while Burti DNFed at lap 6. But that does not mean the team can't produce results. Not just now. Ages ago it was intended to be an all-French team, but there just aren't enough capable French drivers yet. Generally nebulous and in need of an image-building machinery for the fans, the Prost team still has to prove itself in a big way.

Not-So-Possible Headline: Jacques Villeneuve Moves To Prost. Prost Freebie of the day: Acer engine management software. Most Likely Souvenir at the end of Hockenheim race: Parts of melted Renault engine. Total points since Silverstone: 3

HSBC Jaguar

If I would be permitted to have a favorite nonwinning team, it would be Jaguar.

Collecting a critical 5 points with a third place win for Eddie Irvine and a sixth place for Pedro de la Rosa (who replaced Luciano Burti midway through the first semester of the 2001 season). With only 28 GPs completed, the team is under tremendous pressure to achieve, having done well in the IMSA, LeMans and other forms of racing.

As Stewart-Ford in 1999, it managed a podium finish in the least desired of styles. The top runners all failed and crashed out of the race, opening the door for Johnny Herbert to take the checkered flag. With Sir Jackie Stewart at the helm and Bobby Rahal as team boss, 2001 was supposed to be a season of victories, at least finishes in the top six spots. But that is not to happen.

Eddie Irvine constantly complains of a slow, punishing car. Pedro de la Rosa just putters along with consistency, completing race after race, unless that darn head gasket disintegrates.

Most Wanted Headline: Jaguar 1-2 at Indy F1. Most Unlikely Headline: Jaguar Wins Constructors Championship. Wished I Stayed With Ferrari Award: Eddie Irvine. Thanks for the ride trophy: Pedro de la Rosa.

Oh by the way, the big boys are about 10 laps away, thrice around the track.

Ferrari is 118 points away. McLaren-Mercedes has 66 and Williams-BMW 43 points. Sauber-Petronas has 19; Jordan-Honda, 15 and BAR-Honda, 12.

The Homers of F1 make the races interesting. Without them Hakkinen need not use the middle pedal. Coulthard need not be blocked by Bernoldi and Dennis wouldn't run down pitlane for a bit of off-track action. A race without the back markers, given parity of budget and skills, will cause the top three teams to cross the finish line all at the same time.

And a stuffed podium after all, is not a pretty sight to see.

Revo sports great looks but needs 'smooth' push

BY RAYMOND B. TRIBDINO AND TESSA R. SALAZAR

HOW good does new Toyota's Revo have to be to justify its existence? Really good, we surmise. For in the face of the stiff competition coming from Isuzu and Mitsubishi, it can't be anything else.

The Revo has been quite successful, however, in shedding off its people-shuttling, right-angled, smoke-spewing image. By distancing itself from the boxy and utilitarian Tamaraw in looks and purpose, the Revo has spawned 15 variations. Each iteration is made different by engine, drivetrain, standard features and available colors.

A menu of gearbox and powerplant combinations is so vast and made more confusing by the long roster of features.

So there is the top-of-the-ladder SR (Sports Runner) and its leather-clad counterpart, the SRJ. The well-decked, mid-range GSX follows. Down the line are the GLX, GL and the cellar-dwelling DLX. Except for the upper crust G and S series, a diesel variant is available across the range.

We tested the GSX (which, if accepted conventions are used, may mean Grand Sport deluXe) in a rather strange goldish copper color—two-liter engine; two-tone paint scheme; automatic gearbox; well-clad outside and fully furnished inside.

Luxurious interior

Raymond: Ambience is very un-AUV like. No sweat-inducing vinyl here, just glorious moquette fabric that every behind will appreciate. Seats are firm but well-padded in the right places but I fail to appreciate the long center bench up front. The odd shape makes seating difficult, shifting a chore. This bench belongs only in the more agricultural DLX whose duties, I assume, include packing passengers for money. The dashboard is generic but complete with the necessary gauges. A shift indicator will be appreciated for the automatic version. As would be more cupholders. Now bereft of the annoying dashboard shake, rubbery column stalks and mushy pedal feel of the previous version, this Revo feels more solid and seems to be prudently bolted together.

Tessa: Comfortable seats, the smooth feel of the fabric on the skin. Vanity mirrors for both the driver and passenger, cool. I found an efficient aircon even while driving in the high heat of noon with nine passengers and packages on our way to Naic, Cavite. But was it I or was the aircon too cold for comfort, the control having limited choices? The door handles had no glitches, but one notable feature which most AUV buyers and out-of-town drivers during summer would love to hear about is its folding rear seat that can produce more space, plus its lift-up tailgate for wider rear access and ease of loading and unloading. The length is 870 mm from the back of the second row seat to the tailgate, while the width is 1,210 mm.

Performance woes

Raymond: On paper, the performance numbers of this 2.0-liter Revo are admirable. It's 11 horses more than the 1999 model's 94 and delivers 164 Nm of torque at 2,800 revolutions of the crankshaft. Peek at the figures for the gear ratios and you'll expect a relatively healthy performance from the engine-and-gearbox combination. On the road however, it fails to produce the expected surge of power. It just casually chugs along, even with the right foot firmly planted on the accelerator pedal, making daring maneuvers troublesome. This rather anemic performance becomes glaring when trying to reach top gear. It'll take the whole chorus of Santana's "Smooth" to get to 60 from red-to-green. That's about 15 seconds until guitar solo. Add 10 seconds more to get to 100 kph. But this doesn't mean the GSX is not fast. Once it does get to top gear, it'll eat up concrete as capably as anything equally propelled. Until that slow-moving beer truck gets in the way. Time to reload Santana again.

Tessa: I have to think twice when executing overtakes. A few times I wished I could just hide my face in an aborted pass. Overtaking is made difficult because the transmission does not respond as quickly. Unlike the pulsating "kickdown" of other vehicles, the Revo GSX A/T accelerates rather slowly, perfect timing when overtaking becomes essential. It does drive well in stop and go traffic, the longer it stays on the gears the more momentum it creates to keep up to traffic's pace. We calculated gasoline consumption at about 8 kilometers per liter on the open highway and a low 6 km/liter in traffic.

Great looks

Raymond: Though it is Mitsubishi who should be initially credited for advancing AUV styling, creating the first Adventure from old Pajero and Galant spares, Toyota brings a smarter package to fore. The GSX in particular, following the visual impact of the Sport Runner, deserves praises for exterior nicety. Except for that funny graphic stripe midsection of the AUV, everything is civilized but a bit snooty. Expect great handling because of the larger 15-inch alloy wheels and Yokohamas.

Tessa: Except for the eerie color of the test unit—Toyota calls it mojavé brown—details like the security feature, the Toyota Vehicle Illuminations System (TVIS) with keyless entry, are really cool. It has remote lock control combined with antitheft protection system. Adding more security features are its power feature operations, the power window, door lock and side view mirror.

Ride and drive

Raymond: It will not get high grades on a skid pad test, but the Revo GSX does handle well. Naturally one gets mountains of body roll because of the tall stance and higher-than-a-sedan ground clearance. Rigidity is excellent for a chassis-based vehicle, and gobs of suspension travel soak up all but the harshest of bumps. A fitting description for the Revo's ride is "car-like" and with good reason. Those who have leaf-spring suspended sedans will find the ride not that different. Not harsh, but not silky either.

Tessa: OK—you got it—not harsh, not silky. It's somewhere in the middle ground. And speaking of ground, its ground clearance's perfect for the rainy season. I don't need to worry rushing in the flood while driving an automatic transmission.

Objectively, the GSX deserves a 7 for effort. But the lackluster performance was evident from both driver and passenger side. Surely the manual version will produce far better results in that department. (And indeed, according to a fellow motoring journalist, the M/T clocks in at 16 seconds to 100 kph.) Overall, however, the GSX gets good marks for build quality, styling, comfort and features.

The score sheet reads 6 out of a total 10 points. High marks for interior amenities and handling. More points for exterior styling, available variants and color choices. Indeed, there is a lot of room for improvement under the hood. But at a little less than P750,000 it should provide thousands of kilometers of great cruising and sightseeing.

Applause for Ate Glo; the Abalos-Raval fight

I HAD to applaud when President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo promised to improve the traffic situation in Metro Manila. She backed up her promise by saying she would build more flyovers and deploying more measures to smash monstrous jams in the big city.

Fighting words, indeed. I'll pray for the success of this truly laudable project (promise?).

But I applauded loudest when she made special mention of the efforts of General Abenina to curb corruption at the Land Transportation Office. The President, indeed, has noticed the LTO chief's determined efforts to institute drastic reforms at his turf, which is historically known as a haven of scrupulous personalities preying on our hapless countrymen.

With the President's mention of Abenina, it only meant one thing: She was 100 percent behind Abenina's determined bid to improve the image of the LTO.

And since we are at this, may I repeat my suggestion that we also have a three-year cycle insofar as renewing the registration of vehicles is concerned? Maybe, let's start it first with private vehicles as a test case?

I just want to know if this suggestion can hold water or not.

As I said, if we could renew our driver's license once in three years, why not with the registration of our vehicles, too?

Just want to know your thoughts about this, General Abenina.

FULL TANK

Al S. Mendoza

In case you still don't know, one of the major reasons the jams occur almost daily in the metropolis is the seemingly endless feuding between MMDA Chair Ben Abalos and Vicente Raval, the police officer who heads the Traffic Management Group.

Abalos has charged Raval of not doing his job properly. Raval has countered Abalos' traffic enforcers do not report religiously. Raval has charged that 200 of the 500 traffic aides do not report for duty at all but they claim salaries every 15th and 30th of each month.

"Our headcount is right but when it comes to reporting to their assigned posts, they are not there," Raval told Cito Beltran of dzMM, referring to Abalos' traffic enforcers detailed with the MMDA.

A serious charge, if you ask me. When will the two sit together and patch up their differences?

As Ate Glo also said in her Sona speech, "Let's end our bickerings."

I didn't know that the Toyota Corolla is being sold in 140 countries until Takeshi Uchiyamada mentioned it in his speech during the launch of the new Toyota Corolla Altis last July 18 at The Tent of The Fort.

Isn't it amazing that a single model of a car is available in 140 countries? If it's that many, it must really be a good car.

In his speech, Uchiyamada, managing director of Toyota Motor Corp., said over 28 million Corollas have been sold as of the year 2000, making it the world's best-selling passenger car of all time.

Well, I can believe the Corolla is a good car. Malaya J. Mendoza's Corolla XE is almost 10 years old now but it still runs great. I guess that when Malaya finally buys a replacement, she will again seriously consider another Corolla.

Uchiyamada calls the Altis as NCV (New Century Value) to go with the concept of the New Century car.

For Malaya, that sounds attractive enough.

And now a commercial break from a dear friend: Tiara Commercial has opened Pitstop branches in Bicutan and Parañaque in Metro Manila, and in Capiz, Santiago City and Dipolog. Tiara's Nilo Luna said Pitstop sells tires, batteries, aluminum wheels, lubricants, aircon and car mats. Among the brand-names Pitstop carries are Michelin and Kumho tires, Circuit MF and Boss batteries and Fuchs lubricants.

QUOTE ME. Since rains bring brownouts, make that flashlight readily available at your glove compartment.

Jaguar marks milestone by presenting its 1.5 millionth car to charity

COVENTRY, UK—Jaguar celebrated the production milestone of 1.5 million cars since the company's formation by donating the car, a XJ Saloon to charity. The celebration also marked the opening of a new state-of-the-art visitor showcase and Jaguar Gallery.

The XJ Saloon was greeted by Jaguar officials; charity representatives and the Lord Mayor of Coventry Council David Chater as it rolled off the production line at the company's headquarters in Browns Lane, Coventry.

The car will be donated to BEN, the motor industry's benevolent charity as a tribute to industry employees. With the help of a national British newspaper, the 1.5 millionth car will be offered to readers in a premium telephone promotion with all profits going to charity.

Said Jaguar managing director Jonathan Browning: "It is a proud day for all of us at Jaguar and I want to thank everyone involved with Jaguar, our employees and management team, the designers and engineers, and our partners including the trade unions and national and local government—in fact, everyone who has played their part in making Jaguar what it is today. This production milestone seemed the perfect opportunity to say thank you to all who have made Jaguar's progress possible.

"Since the acquisition of Jaguar by Ford Motor Co. in 1989, Jaguar has grown rapidly. In the early 1990s, we were producing around 20,000 cars per year. This year, with the introduction of the X-Type we will break through the 100,000 cars a year barrier. By the time we introduce the F-Type roadster to our model lineup in three to four years, we will have been transformed from a two-car line company to a five-car line company producing around 200,000 cars a year and be a significant competitor in every market around the world."

Since the launch of the original XJ6 in September 1968, Jaguar has made six generations of XJ series saloons, which between them have reached a total production figure of over 800,000 cars representing more than half of all Jaguars ever built. Originally introduced as a single model range to replace no less than four different predecessors, today the XJ Saloon is the flagship of the expanding Jaguar range, as the largest and most prestigious of three saloons. Jaguar has produced more than 50 models since 1931.

A year of milestones continue for Jaguar in 2001, with both the 40th anniversary of the production of the first Jaguar E-Type and Jaguar's first win at Le Mans some 50 years ago with the Jaguar C-Type. Celebrations will culminate later this year with the centenary of Jaguar's founder Sir William Lyons with a major rally and charity ball.

No more racing on the Skyway

SPEED maniacs, beware: you can no longer race your cars on the Skyway. PNCC Skyway Corp., the operator of the Skyway System, has installed radar guns on the North and South Luzon Tollways and on the Skyway to measure the speed of passing vehicles.

The PNCC has also stationed patrols at identified high-speed areas to monitor speeding vehicles, not to mention enforce traffic rules and regulations such as the Clean Air Act, Seat Belt Use Law and speed limits. PNCC chair and president Luis Sison, who assumed office last March, set the speed limits at 60 kph minimum for all vehicles and a maximum speed of 100 kph for private vehicles, 90 kph for buses and 80 kph for 10-wheelers and cargo trucks. So the 80 kph max speed sign on the Skyway no longer applies.

The installation of radar guns is part of a campaign to make the Skyway System, which includes the North and South Luzon Tollways, a Traffic Discipline Zone. Motorists who use the tollways regularly cannot fail to notice the new traffic signage, lane markings and posting of orange road cones that deter swerving. The traffic discipline campaign must be working, if the newsletter of Citra Metro Manila Tollways Corp., the developer/investor of the Skyway System, is to be believed. Citra's May-June 2001 Bulletin claims that the average number of apprehensions per day from January to May 2001 increased by 43 percent to 196 a day this year from 137 a day in the same period last year. While trucks and buses accounted for the most violations, there has been a significant increase in apprehended cars. From January to May 2000, cars made up only 8 percent of violations but in the first semester this year, that figure jumped to 21 percent.

The presence of radar and the increased possibility of being apprehended for speeding will sadden car enthusiasts who use the Skyway on Sundays—when the Skyway is relatively deserted—to test new, high-performance cars or to "exercise" sports cars at speeds ranging from 180 kph to 200 kph. Maybe the PNCC Skyway patrolmen will come to miss the three Ferraris that have been cavorting on the Skyway on Sundays, racing at such breakneck speeds (over 250 kph?) that they were never caught by the traffic enforcers.

On the other hand, those of us who drive at a less spectacular pace cannot deny that travel time between Makati and Alabang, the most heavily used stretch of the South Luzon Tollway (SLT), has been reduced substantially because of the Skyway and the rehab of the SLT's at-grade level. What used to take more than an hour to travel during off-peak hours is down to around 35 minutes these days—if you don't take into account the many minutes of delay caused by Citra's sequestration of toll lanes from the motorist public in favor of e-Pass subscribers who constitute a minority.

ON THE ROAD

Another delaying factor is the bottleneck caused by the single-lane exit ramp of the southbound Skyway after the Bicutan exit. Citra claims that this exit ramp is temporary and the permanent one will be much wider when the Skyway project is extended up to Alabang as originally planned. But here's the catch: Citra can't or won't complete the Skyway project unless its petition to increase toll rates by 300 percent is approved by the Toll Regulatory Board (TRB).

Can you imagine how the prices of basic commodities and services will soar when the one-way toll from Magallanes to Alabang or vice-versa costs P75 for cars and jeepneys, P190 for buses and light trucks and P300 for heavy trucks/trailers? Citra is using the decline of the peso to justify its proposed 300 percent rate increase although the value of the peso has not dropped by 300 percent. It's a good thing that concerned individuals, homeowners' associations and the City Governments of Muntinlupa and Paranaque have filed their opposition and are attending the TRB hearings. Because of the impact of the toll rate increase on the lives of hundreds of thousands of people, the hearings should be regularly covered by the news media.

NISSAN FRONTIER Pleasure Series dominates local pickup market

UTILITY, power, traction.

These are the values that make a pickup what it is. It's solid, dependable, all-around transportation for almost all kinds of terrain. A new dimension has been added—luxury. And in no other hardworking, diesel-burning pickup is luxury more evident than in the Nissan Frontier.

The Frontier, whether in 4x2 or 4x4 mode, provides a level of interior comfort not found in pickups of its rugged build and looks.

Universal Motors' Lani de Leon points to the fact that pickups are more often than not used as daily drivers. Driven not only as when hauling loads, but also for domestic tasks, such as shuttling the kids to school, trips to the grocery and as the office transporter.

Upgraded series

But one cannot forget truck toughness and versatility, which is why Nissan came up with the upgraded Frontier Pleasure Series. Arguably the most extensive effort at fusing car comfort with truck-hauling power, the Frontier enjoys the title of being the first diesel pickup to be equipped with an automatic transmission.

"The flexibility of the pickup makes it a perfect everyday vehicle, but up until the Frontier, the ride and comfort level has not been as car-like," comments De Leon.

Nissan Frontier's Pleasure Series makes use of a lot of leather—wrapping the steering wheel, shift knobs, seats and door trim—to produce a stately ambience. Simulated wood grain paneling accents the supple leather. White-faced gauges fill the instrument panel while cup holders, utility pockets, twin glove boxes are standard.

A choice of a 3.2-liter diesel in automatic and manual gearboxes for the 4x4 and 4x2 variants is available. As is a 2.7-liter diesel engine mated to a 5 speed manual transmission. The 3.2 version is perhaps the most powerful, yet economical range-topping engine-to-gearbox combination for maximum torque at low engine speeds.

Unparalleled levels of safety

Safety is at the forefront of the Frontier Pleasure series with its driver-side SRS airbag and Zone Body Concept. This Nissan-exclusive safety standard brings together crumple-zone, impact energy dispersion with a rigid passenger cabin providing unparalleled levels of safety for a pickup. The ladder-type chassis provides rigidity and additional safety in both frontal and lateral collisions. Door-mounted side-impact beams absorb side collisions.

It is therefore no wonder why the Frontier took the pickup market by storm in the first quarter and a half of 2001, with 35.9 percent market share.

Available in a barrage of improved colors with bed liners as an added convenience, the Frontier Pleasure Series starts at P744,000 for the 2.7-liter 4x2. The 3.2-liter automatic 4x2 sells at P819,000. The top-of-the-line 4x4 models cost P1,005,000 for the manual. Add P40,000 more for an automatic transmission.

Take it once a day to prevent HEART ATTACK

Naughty, naughty

LARRY CRUZ's latest restaurant, not yet formally inaugurated when I visited it in early July, is called the Afrodisia Grill (53-A Annapolis St., Greenhills, San Juan; tel. 723-9705). "Are you sure?" I asked on the telephone, "does it serve aphrodisiacs?" No, answered Jun Ambas when he welcomed me in, "it is just Larry being naughty." Playing with words, he meant, which makes the new restaurant an adventure in ideas and words.

First, the idea. The menu puts it thus: "Afrodisia, n. An exotic state of mind. The desire for satisfaction, fulfillment. The temple of delight. Root word: Aphrodite, goddess of love. Aphrodisiac, n. and adj., referring to something that arouses basic instincts."

Let me add Lesley Chamberlain's take (1997): "History's superstitious masses were always anxious about the origins and maintenance of sexual desire, hence the belief that certain foods are aphrodisiac. Chinese folk-healers and high-street fishmongers still encourage the myth of edible substances working inside the body to generate arousal. The first recommend the velvet extracted from the horns of young stags, a cruel bolstering of human middle age with animal youth. The second suggest cod's roe on toast. Both ideas accord with the ancient faith in the therapeutic efficacy of resemblances: that is to say, for fertility, eat eggs; for youth, eat the young."

Many books explore the idea: can food arouse and maintain sexual desire? The final answer: No,

IN GOOD TASTE

Doreen G. Fernandez

although the tastes and textures, the pleasure of good food and wine, can engender a mood of desire. The only substances—drugs, really—that can be so called are irritants, and dangerous, namely cantharides or Spanish fly, and Johimbine, a substance derived from a South American tree, and not known to occur in food.

Pleasurable pursuit

E. Aguilar Cruz, the wise gourmet and Larry's father, once said that the only related Filipino food is balut—an invigorizer, pampalakas ng tuhod. So calm down, and remember that it is the mind, the atmosphere, the people, the pleasure that does the job, and not just the food.

The Afrodisia Grill directs the diner's thoughts "to the enjoyment of another pleasurable pursuit: food," through the re-titling of some of the LJC Restaurants' most famous dishes. Drinks start with Ejaculada ("creamy and explosive"), Viagra (rum and egg, to "awaken your hidden desires") and from Café Havana, Cuba Libre, Mojito and Limoncito.

Pampagana, now called Foreplay, includes Sisid ("traditional sisig, deconstructed"), Susong Hubad (kuhol undressed and cooked in garlic, chili and olive oil), Usa Pa Nga (Deer One, or tapang usa), and Eggnergizer (fried or fresh balut).

From the grill come bangus bellies, Kitang Kita Wow (kitang), Hita ("babaeng hito"), Pok Pok Chop, Legs and Butt SQer, and Gabarilis na Panga (jaw of yellow-fin tuna). These are accompanied by the Afrodisia Sungea Sauce Boat, containing nine sauces, generally hot, to mix and match and thus spark the grilled entrées: tomato sambal, kamias bagoong, garlic chili sauce, lime sauce with scallions, peanut sauce,

Follow the brickroad to TGI Friday's

IF you live in Cainta, Antipolo, Marikina and Pasig areas, chances are you've been awaiting the opening of TGI Friday's at a mall in the area.

The wait is over. To meet its goal of taking its tradition of fun dining to as many people as possible, TGI Friday's has opened its sixth branch in the Philippines at the Brickroad of Sta. Lucia East in Cainta, Rizal. The two-level branch seats 220 people.

"We are very excited with the opening of Friday's Sta. Lucia East. Being a freestanding structure, it has the same character as Friday's branches in the United States," says TGI Friday's director for operations for Asia Al Herzfeld, who was recently in Manila to observe the branch's staff training and preparation for the opening.

"Décor, music and lighting have all been carefully designed to please the guests," says Friday's director for operations in the Philippines Robert Santos.

Upon entering the new restaurant, one will immediately notice the place's elegant "clutter." Juxtaposed against wooden floors, bentwood chairs and striped tablecloths are Tiffany lamps, knickknacks and memorabilia that a full-time antique "picker" has extensively scoured from auctions and flea markets and restored in Friday's Nashville warehouse.

The Sta. Lucia branch offers the same extensive menu selection and rich beverage collection that Friday's is known for: King-sized servings of steaks, ribs, chops, pizzas, sandwiches, burgers and seafood and creative concoctions like the Smoothies and Flings. Friday's corporate chef Mari-nella Marcelo and her Top Gun team will regularly see to kitchen operations and staff training to maintain food quality. Action at the bar likewise continues with the restaurant's famed bartenders mixing the drinks with their energetic flair.

TGI Friday's Sta. Lucia East is headed by a well-experienced management team composed of general manager Al Cordova and restaurant managers Lance Eugenio, Raffy Santos and Alex Dacasin.

Thirty-six years after Newsweek and The Saturday Evening Post declared the opening of TGI Friday's first branch in New York as the dawning of the singles age, the dining chain continues to provide good food in a cozy, yet lively atmosphere. From a meeting place for single adults, it now caters to families, executives, professionals and teenagers.

LARRY Cruz

You get the idea. By re-titling, Larry teases sight, smell, taste, touch and hearing—as well as memories and associations. Diners take in the savor of LJC best, while their minds dance, their lips smile, they joke with each other, with the waiters and with the menu.

The stellar grilled food was the Gabarilis na Panga, in which the giant yellow-fin tuna jaw was explored for every flavor it had—outside the bones, in the crevices, succulent and vari-flavored, like dark and white meat. The pla-pla was butterfly-cut as if in flight, then fried to a crisp. The tapang usa and tapang baboy damo were flavorful and tender enough. The "undressed" kuhol in a shallow dish tempted one to soak the garlicky olive oil sauce up with hot pan de sal.

Two vegetable dishes—Gising-gising and Pak Bet ni Manong, provided pleasant accents. I can never resist the lovely sourness of Sinigang na Kanduli sa Miso, with mustard leaves in textural contrast.

And the desserts truly pleased: Maria Clara's Secret being mangga't suman with ice cream; Claude's Dream pandan gulaman with ice cream.

Despite their sighs of approval for the food, my guests liked best of all the decor: Larry's collection of Banawe artifacts. We ate at a long, smooth irregularly shaped table, a slab of molave that could seat at least eight. There were carvings and weaves on the wall, and a small gift shop in back with such rarities as scoops, footstools or bangko all made from single pieces of wood. The smooth urbanity of the wood came not from the mountain source, but from its having been worn smooth by the years.

Unusual idea it is, the Afrodisia Grill—good food, teasing names, pleasant associations, all harmonized by excellent service and the dignity of mountain artifacts. It is definitely worth more than a visit or two.
